The Weather Interests Before the Commerce Committee—New Census Bill in the Senate—Scheme for Improving Our Merchant Marine—Miscellaneous.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—The debate on the admission of Virginia in the Senate to-day was more diffuse and unimportant in whatever view the subject is regarded, than any discussion which has taken place in that body for a long time. Tired, apparently, of debating about the biography of Governor WALKER, wearied of reading anonymous letters and telegrams, the body devoted itself to a rambling discussion on the powers of the General Government over the States. Finally, at about 6 o'clock, the friends of the bill forced its opponents to an agreement to vote to-morrow at 4 o'clock on the whole subject. The House bill will pass without doubt as amended by Senator EDMUNDS. In this the House will concur, though BUTLER, it is said, desires to force it back into committee.

THE CENSUS.

The Senate, as your correspondent has already intimated, is apparently determined to strangle the census. Senator CONKLING's committee have smothered the bill upon which the House bestowed so much labor, and to-day Mr. CONKLING reported a bill of half a dozen lines, simply enacting that the census should be taken under the old system, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make such changes in the schedules as the late amendments of the Constitution require. This revives the old Marshalship system with all its imperfections. It is difficult to determine the motives which actuate the Senators in their opposition. It would be ungenerous, perhaps, to say that Senators look upon the bill with disfavor, because it gives members of the House a chance to secure the appointment of a certain number of officers in each Congressional District, but it is nevertheless true that there are Senators who are not above such selfish feeling. It may be, however, a feeling of economy; but if it is, it is of the most ephemeral kind, and only crops out at long intervals in the Senate. The result will probably be that the question will finally get into a Committee of Conference of the two Houses, where something will be evolved, the nature of which it is now impossible to predict.

MR. WELLS' REPORT IN THE HOUSE.

The high tariff party have met with their first signal defeat, and it may be accepted as an indication of what is in store for the efforts to maintain the present incongruous and burdensome tariff system. Mr. LAFLIN, Chairman of the Committee on Printing, reported back the Senate joint resolution to print 5,000 copies of Commissioner WELLS' report, for the use of the Senate, and 12,000 copies for the use of the House. He made a short and eloquent speech in its favor, and was followed by his colleague on the Committee, Mr. CAKE, who, though opposed to the report, would print this one, because it was the last. Then followed a very general and spicy discussion, lasting nearly two hours, in which Dyer, Maynard, McCarthy, Kelley, Butler and Bailey spoke against printing, and Laflin, Brooks, Mungen, Randall, Hay, Garfield, Marshall, Peters, Logan, Stevenson and Moore, of Illinois, spoke in favor of printing. The chief speeches made against the resolution were by MAYNARD, who seems to grow narrower and more bigoted with every session; MCCARTHY, whose salt interest inspired him to compare Mr. WELLS with BENEDICT ARNOLD, and Mr. KELLEY, who is the most earnest, most consistent and most industrious of the high tariff advocates. BUTLER cavilled at some of the statistics of the report, and voted against printing it, but he believes in the report, nevertheless. On ordering the previous question the vote stood 128 to 51, and the monopolists had not the courage to demand the yeas and nays on its passage. Mr. LAFLIN closed in an eloquent speech, and the bill passed without a division.

NEGRO SUFFRAGE IN TENNESSEE.

Advices received here from Nashville state that the Franchise Committee of the Tennessee State Convention, have reported an article guaranteeing the right of suffrage to the colored men of the State; and the probability is that it will be adopted.

THE TARIFF QUESTION.

The Ways and Means Committee this morning had before them a delegation representing the hide and leather interest of the country. The following gentlemen connected with this interest are in the city, though they were not all present to-day: S. R. Spaulding, W. B. Spooner, and Chauncey Coon, of Boston; Mr. Pomeroy, of Cincinnati; G.W. Allen, of Milwaukee, and O. L. Grant, of Chicago. Mr. ALLEN presented the case in favor of the abrogation of the duty upon hides, and made the following points in favor of the demand.

First—That leather and the manufacturers of leather, boots and shoes, harness, saddlery, belting, &c., compose now, next to agriculture, the largest industrial interest in the country, employing more capital and labor than any other save that. Second—That before the war there existed a large export trade of leather to Europe, and of the manufactures of leather to South America; that trade is now gone to Canada and European countries. Third—That this is owing to two causes, one of which, the high price of labor, effects everything; and a duty of ten per cent. in gold on all imported hides. The Canadian manufacturers, paying no duty on hides and no internal manufacturers or sales tax, are enabled to produce leather at prices that drive American manufacturers from all the markets of the world save our own. Fourth—Foreign hides and domestic hides do not actually enter into competition with each other, not being interchangeable in the manufacture of leather save to a very limited extent. South American hides make our greatest staple, hemlock sole leather. This forms ninety-seven per cent. ninety-eight per cent. of all this kind of leather made in this country. Domestic hides are used principally for harness and upper leather stocks. The reduction of duty, therefore, would not materially affect the domestic hide; and, by being enabled to export the manufactures of sole leather, it would necessarily increase the demand for and consumption of of upper leather, thereby increasing the production and increasing largely the labor of the country. Fifth—That, while the price of domestic hides may or may not be reduced by the exemption of foreign hides from duty, the farmer, who may prefer to be obliged to take fifty cents less on a hide he produces, will, for every such reduction, receive in return a reduction in the product of leather which he consumes of 25 to 33, his consumption of the manufacture being greater than his production of the raw material. That the great surplus of hides is from the Southwestern States, Texas principally; and that, if there is any loss by the abrogation of the duty, it will fall upon those cattle raisers or the middle men who trade and speculate in cattle.

Mr. ALLEN added, at the request of the Committee, that the cause which produced these results was the fact that the average price of green salted hides in the Eastern markets for the past three years has been thirteen to thirteen and a half cents per pound, against seven and a half cents for three years before the war. This, with the high price of labor, was a sufficient answer to the inquiry. Members of the Committee state that the presentation of the case by Mr. ALLEN was very terse and forcible.

DECISION IN A KNOTTY CASE.

An officer of the army, while changing station, lost a part of his baggage. It appears that the property lost was duly delivered by the Quartermaster to the officers of the steamer at Savannah, Ga., but that on her arrival at Jacksonville, Fla., a portion of the same was missing. The steamer was regularly employed by the Quartermaster's Department. Upon these facts the Quartermaster at Savannah recommended that the Government commence suit against the owners of the steamer for the loss, and the Quartermaster-General, in transmitting the account, with vouchers of the lost articles to the Treasury, presented the question whether the Government or the officer should prosecute the carriers. The Second Comptroller, in a review of the case, said: "From the evidence presented it appears that the Government is not indebted for transportation service to the owners of the steamer. Were it otherwise the Quartermaster's Department would be justified, I think, in retaining in its custody any money due the owners for such service, not by way of set-off but to await the judgment of a Court in a suit brought by either party, (the owner of the steamer bringing suit for services in the Court of Claims and the Quartermaster's Department a cross action for loss of chattels, while in transitu by the carrier.) But the fact being, as already stated, that there is nothing due from the United States to the carriers for services performed, may the Quartermaster's Department properly commence an action against the owners of the steamer for the loss of the personal effects of the officer? Army Regulations, Par. 1,097, provide that officers' baggage shall not exceed (mess chest and all personal effects included) a certain number of pounds—the enumeration is given for all grades of officers. There does not appear to be any question raised an objection to the right of the officer to transportation under this regulation, and it also appears that the custom and practice of the Quartermaster's Department under the regulation were strictly observed in the issue of the order for the transportation in the present case.

An officer of the Quartermaster's Department, moreover, contracted with the steamer, and paid for the transportation. These facts, therefore, bring the case within the application of the legal rule, that for any default on the part of the carrier, not one of the excepted perils of common law, he shall be answerable to the shipper. It would follow as the corollary of this principle that the officer of the Quartermaster's Department who delivered the baggage to the carrier, or in his absence his principal, the Quartermaster-General should bring an action against the master or owners of the steamer for the non-performance of the contract on the part of the latter. Since, however, no appropriation can, from the nature of the case, receive any benefit from the prosecution of a suit as above mentioned, the question of payment for professional services which might be rendered is conditional, to wit: can they legally be paid from the contingencies of the War Department? In this view of the case the only question to be decided relates to the necessity of employing counsel and the amount to be paid for their services—a subject matter, in my opinion, properly to be decided by the Secretary of War.

THE GOLD INVESTIGATION.

The Banking and Currency Committee continued their investigation this morning by the examination of C. J. OSBORN and a Mr. BOCOCK, both of whom were brokers for the gold clique, and testified to their employment by the RING, for the purpose of buying gold for them. FISK and GOULD will be here on Saturday.

AMERICAN OCEAN STEAMSHIP LINES.

A prominent Western member of Congress has prepared an important bill, which he will introduce in a few days, having for its object the establishment of different lines of steamships to Europe. The ideas on which the bill is framed are, that it is absolutely necessary for us to make a national effort to recover our commercial supremacy; and that, as private enterprise under existing laws is utterly incapable of accomplishing so great an undertaking, patriotism and statesmanship alike demand Government aid and encouragement. The bill will provide for the establishment of lines of steamships from Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore and New-York, each line to be subsidized. The proposition is to diminish the expenses of the Navy Department, which now average annually some twenty-nine millions, to, say fifteen millions per annum, and give about ten millions of dollars in subsidies. It is argued that in a few years the country will thus have a commercial marine second to that of no nation in the world, ready at all times to be turned over to the Government in case of war; that we shall have a school for our seamen, and that, in addition to all, it will be one of the best means to revive the shipbuilding interest.

RHODE ISLAND'S GIFT TO CONGRESS.

At the last session of Congress a bill was passed setting apart the old House of Representatives as a sort of national art gallery, and providing that such States of the Union as chose should be entitled to make the offer to Congress of a statue or other work of art commemorating some historic event, or eminent soldier or civilian, to be placed in this hall. Rhode Island, today, sent the first contribution in the shape of a statue of Major-General NATHANIEL GREENE, of the Revolutionary Army. The presentation was made in a neat speech by Senator ANTHONY, and its acceptance and a vote of thanks to Rhode Island was moved by Senator SUMNER.

RECEPTION BY MAYOR BOWEN.

Mayor BOWEN entertained the members of the District of Columbia Committees of both Houses. One of the principal objects of the meeting was to afford an opportunity for a friendly and social chat over the District wants, and the measures necessary to be taken to improve the city generally.

SENATE POST OFFICE COMMITTEE.

The Senate Post Office Committee had a meeting this morning, but it was more for the purpose of considering nominations for Postmasters, &c.

NOMINATIONS.

An Executive Session will be held to-morrow, when the Judiciary Committee will report several of the nominations before that body.

WASHINGTON'S AMUSEMENTS.

Washington is just now well supplied with amusements of a superior class, which is not often the case, and full houses greet them nightly. Your amusing and susceptible friends, the LEMGARDS, are at the National; LAURA KEENE keeps "School" at Wall's Opera House. The Woman's Suffrage ladies perform at Lincoln Hall; while the MAX MARETZEK, the prince of operatic impressarios, is coming here next week with KELLOGG, LEVERNE, RONCONI and the rest of his troupe, to give Washington a week of such opera as it has not had for a whole year. The sale of seats has already been very large.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT.

The following appointments of Assistant Assessors have been made: For the Thirtieth District of New-York, William Wiggins, Henry M. Cooke, James Wilcox, John J. Weber, Silas M. Dodge, A. H. Porter; for the Ninth District, Rufus Skidmore, Ferdinand Brandin, H. Q. French, Peter H. Houghtaling, Albert Bogert, William P. Hall, J. Cameron; for the Twenty-third District, John C. Hanchett and Charles J. Spaulding. The only nominations sent to the Senate to-day by the President were of a military character, and none above the rank of Captain.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

THE INDIAN COMMISSION.

The United States Indian Commission continued its session until to-day. On Monday the Cherokee Delegation, headed by Colonel DOWNING, their Chief, came before the Board and asked the Commission to use their influence with Congress against the passage of several bills, which they claim to be in direct violation of their treaties with the Government. Colonels ADAIR and VAUGHN, and Judge FIELD, were eloquent in their appeals for justice. The Commission promised their earnest attention to the subject. Chief Pitchelyn, of the Choctaw Nation, also made a warm appeal for schools among the Indians, declaring that the salvation of the race lay in those institutions. He said that there are many educated Christians in his tribe.

On motion of ex-Governor LANE, of Indiana, the Commission resolved to request the Secretary of the Interior to recommend to Congress to make liberal appropriations for educational purposes, to be expended among the tribes and bands gathered on the reservations or in other permanent homes, and to put the expenditures of all moneys not otherwise provided for under the direction of the Secretary; to place all schools for Indians ordered by the Government under the inspection of said Commissioners or other authorized agents.

Mr. ROBERT CAMPBELL, of St. Louis, then offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

That as the opinion of this Board it is important that the necessary appropriations be promptly made by Congress to aid in locating the Apaches, of Arizona and New-Mexico, on permanent reservations; alike for the protection of the whites and the safety of the Indians and the economy of the Administration.

Commissioner FARWELL, of Chicago, having resigned the Secretaryship, the Board passed a complimentary resolution in regard to the faithful and prompt manner in which he had discharged his duties as Secretary of the Board. VINCENT COLYER, of New-York, was then elected Secretary, and FELIX R. BRUNOT, of Pittsburg, WM. E. DODGE and NATHAN BISHOP, of New-York, and GEO. H. STUART, of Philadelphia, were appointed an Executive Committee to conduct the business of the Board in the interim of the sessions.

Yesterday the Commissioners paid their respects to the President, and through their Chairman, Mr. BRUNOT, assured him of their increasing interest in the work and the economy of the President's policy. The President replied that he was pleased to learn that the Commissioners supported him in his endeavors to regulate Indian affairs. He thanked them for their services and said he was confident that faithfulness in carrying out treaties with kindness was the surest way of protecting the Western border from desolating and costly wars. When Congress failed to make the necessary appropriation and war ensued there was no other alternative but to use force, however expensive.

Mrs. GRANT entertained the wives of the Commissioners at a luncheon to-day, at the Executive Mansion. It is said to have been a very pleasant affair.

FORTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

SENATE....WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.

The House joint resolution on the subject of the ventilation of the halls of the Senate and House was laid before the Senate by the Chair. The amendment providing for ascertaining the cost of the proposed improvements was concurred in.

A STATUE TO GENERAL NATHANIEL GREENE.

Mr. ANTHONY presented a communication from the Governor of Rhode Island presenting to Congress, in the name of the people of that State, a marble statue of NATHANIEL GREENE. This statue had been placed in the old hall of the House of Representatives, in pursuance of an act of Congress setting apart that chamber as a receptacle for the statues of distinguished Americans now deceased—two from each State. Mr. ANTHONY, in performing this duty, eulogized the character and services of General GREENE, and commented at length upon the stirring times in which he lived and took active part, and their influence upon the history of the country.

Mr. SUMNER submitted resolutions accepting the statue, returning thanks to the Governor of Rhode Island, and through him to the people of the State, for the beautiful work of art, and assigning the statue a place in the gallery of the old hall of the House. He said that among the Generals of the Revolution, GREENE was next after WASHINGTON, and his military genius, which was of no common order, had been frequently shown. And this national recognition of his patriotism and fidelity to the cause of liberty, was eminently appropriate.

Mr. SAWYER reviewed the military history of General GREENE, his remarkable personal character and the story of his sufferings, defeats and great achievements in the war of the Revolution. The General's greatest triumph, he said, had been achieved in South Carolina, which fact had been officially recognized by the Legislature of that State; and he now, in behalf of South Carolina, added his humble tribute of respect for the memory of General GREENE.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, also addressed the Senate, after which the concurrent resolutions submitted by Mr. SUMNER were adopted.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following bills were introduced and referred:

By Mr. CONKLING—For the preservation of harbors in the United States against encroachment.

By Mr. ROSS—To grant right of way through public lands to the Junction City and Denver Railway Company.

By Mr. CASSERLY—To promote the disposition of public lands in California. It provides that thirty days after the passage of the act public lands shall be open to entry by homestead and preemption settlers only.

TELEGRAPH POSTAL SYSTEM.

Mr. RAMSEY introduced a bill to establish a postal telegraph system, and to incorporate the United States Postal Telegraph Company.

It authorizes the Postmaster-General to establish telegraph offices in connection with post offices in every city and village where telegraph stations are now maintained, and at such other places on the line of the telegraph as the business of the community may require; to provide for the reception of messages at every postal telegraph offices, sub-office and street letter box, for their transmission between postal telegraph offices, by contract with the Postal Telegraph Company, and for their special and immediate delivery where a letter delivery is provided by law, or within one mile of every postal telegraph office; where there is no delivery; and a delivery, at special rates, beyond such limits, excepting messages transmitted at night, which shall be delivered the next morning. He is also directed to let the transmission of messages by mail to or from the nearest postal telegraph office, when received for or destined to any place not having such an office; for the transmission by telegraph of orders; for the re-transmission of the message in special cases of priority of transmission, and for transmission where the whole amount due has not been paid. The rate to be prepaid for transmission and delivery of messages of twenty words or figures or less, including date, address and signature, shall not exceed twenty-five cents for each and every 500 miles or fractional part thereof, measured in an air line, and for each additional five words or less, one-fifth of the above rates. But the rates for messages directed to be transmitted by night shall not exceed twenty-five cents for each and every 1,000 miles or fractional part thereof, and for each additional ten words one-fifth of these rates. The rates shall be prepaid by telegraphic stamps, and shall cover the expenses of the Post Office of immediate special delivery and of transmission by mail where required to or from any postal telegraph office in the United States. The bill authorizes a contract to be made with the Postal Telegraph Company for ten years, upon their furnishing security for the performance of these requirements. The Postal Company is authorized to make special contracts for the transmission of Press messages, the rates not to exceed five mills per word by night and seven and a half mills by day, for every 500 miles. Where the same message is delivered at the same office to several newspapers, but one rate shall be charged, with the necessary cost of manifolding copies when made by the Company. The rates for the Associated Press news shall not exceed those now paid by the several Press Associations to the Western Union Telegraph Company. A postage of two cents shall be paid on each message, and for three copies of the same message are dropped off at several offices, but one postage shall be paid. The Postmaster-General shall from time to time reduce the compensation to be paid the Company, and shall report to Congress the cost of the transmission of messages; provided that the net income of the Company (after the payment of its operating expenses) shall not thereby be reduced more than seventeen per cent. on the capital stock of the Company. Telegraph stamps are to be provided, &c. A Commissioner of Telegraphs is to be appointed, and punishment provided for divulging the contents of messages, or wilfully obstructing their transmission. The eighth section incorporates Gardiner C. Hubbard, S. W. Bates and Estes Howe, of Massachusetts; Woodbury Davis, of Maine; A. P. Killer, of Ohio; John D. Tracy and E. D. L. Sweet, of Illinois; R. Blakeley, of Minnesota; B. F. Allen, of Iowa; W. F. Downs, of Kansas; Chas. G. Hammond, of Nebraska; L. L. Barnes and G. R. Weeks, of Arkansas; S. A. Stockdale and J. J. Noble, of Louisiana; Chas. J. Pollard, of Alabama; John P. King, of Georgia; Peter Parker and Anthony Polak, of Washington, as a body politic under the name of the United States Postal Telegraph Company. Finally, it is provided that at any time after five years from its organization, the Postmaster-General may purchase the property and franchise of the Company, on terms to be fixed by five disinterested persons, two to be chosen by the Postmaster-General, two by the Company, and the fifth by those four; provided, that the terms shall be approved and the purchase consummated by Congress.

A PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. THAYER, by way of correction, said that in his remarks on the preceding day relative to gross misrepresentations in connection with the circulation of petitions for the abolition of the franking privilege, he had referred to the reckless statements made in behalf of the proposed reform. He did not intend to impute to any head of department intentional misrepresentation, and asserted his confidence in the purity of the motives of the Postmaster-General.

THE CENSUS.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on Revision of Laws, reported the House Census bill, with an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be instructed so to change the schedule and blanks to be used in enumerating the inhabitants of the United States in 1870 to make the same conform to the Constitution of the United States.

THE ADMISSION OF VIRGINIA.

The Virginia bill was then taken up.

Mr. WILSON moved to amend by inserting a proviso that the Constitution of the State shall never be so amended as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote or hold office who are now entitled to vote under said Constitution, except in punishment of crime, nor exclude from service as juror any person on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude. The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DRAKE renewed the amendment previously offered by him admitting Virginia to representation in Congress on the following fundamental conditions:

That the State Constitution shall never be changed to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the right to vote, who now enjoy that right to vote, except in punishment of such crimes as are now felonies at common law, whereof they shall have been duly convicted under laws equally applicable to all inhabitants of said State, provided that no alteration of the State Constitution prospective in its effects may be made in regard to the time and place of residence of the voters.

Mr. DRAKE said this fundamental condition had been required of all the other reconstructed States, and in view of the proposed attempt, which he believed to be in the programme of the Democracy, to overturn the Fifteenth Amendment by the aid of the Courts and another Department of the Government, it was necessary as a means of securing the protection of the black race in Virginia and the other late rebellious States.

Mr. HARLAN supported the amendment in a lengthy speech, principally because of its necessity as a measure of protection for the loyal people of Virginia, by insuring to them the free exercise of the ballot. Having been imposed upon the other States these fundamental conditions should not be omitted in the case of Virginia.

Mr. HOWARD said stringent conditions to prevent the ostracism of colored people were particularly applicable to Virginia as foremost of the States in rebellion.

Mr. THURMAN said the proposition of the amendment was to say to a State that her people should not be allowed to amend their own Constitution. He denied the power of Congress to make such a declaration of effect prior to a constitutional amendment, by which some of the reserved rights of the States still left would be taken from them. In this way only could the Constitution be made to authorize this exercise of power.

Further debate upon the question of the validity of an alleged compact between the United States and a State, prior to the admission of the State, was participated in by Messrs. MORTON, DAVIS, THURMAN and HARLAN.

Mr. HOWARD forwarded to the clerk and had read, a telegram from a citizen of Atlanta, Ga., whose name he refused to divulge, for prudential reasons, setting forth that a conspiracy was in progress in the Legislature of Georgia, as a means of getting the State into the Union and afterwards defying the laws of Congress. Members of the Legislature were known to have taken the oath prescribed by Congress as a test of their eligibility, when they were entirely unable to take it without perjury. Several Senators inquired the name of the author of the communication.

Mr. HOWARD replied that he knew the author to be a gentleman of intelligence and reliability, who had resided several years in Georgia; but he declined to give his name, as its publication would expose his correspondent to personal danger.

Mr. MORTON said that within a few days past he had received a number of communications similar in character, some of which asserted that a fund had been raised to defend members of the Georgia Legislature from prosecution for perjury in taking the oath required.

A motion to adjourn by Mr. CAMERON was defeated by yeas 28, nays 29.

Messrs. CONKLING, HOWE and CASSERLY discussed the legal question involved in the exercise of jurisdiction over States not yet admitted to the Union.

Mr. HAMLIN moved to adjourn, to enable the members of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia to keep an engagement with the Mayor of Washington. Not agreed to; yeas 23, nays 24.

A subsequent motion by Mr. MORTON for adjournment met the same fate, by yeas 20, nays 25.

Mr. DRAKE said he protested against the attempt to take advantage of the absence of some of the Senators, by forcing a vote at this time upon the proposition he had submitted. He charged that the Senators having charge of this bill had gone around to the friends of the measure and induced them to remain, while the opponents of the bill had left the chamber in ignorance of the condition of affairs.

Several Senators remarked that absentees would return before a vote could be had upon the bill.

Mr. WILSON moved to adjourn, and said if the motion was agreed to, he would agree a vote should be taken to-morrow, (Friday,) at 4 o'clock.

Messrs. HOWARD and POMEROY expressed acquiescence in the proposition.

Mr. CASSERLY suggested that in any agreement to be made with the opponents of the bill, it should be specifically agreed that the whole of the Virginia question be disposed of at the time appointed, and not merely a particular bill, so that a former misunderstanding on the subject should not again occur.

Mr. TRUMBULL also desired to have a specific agreement, if any was to be made, and charged that in violating the arrangement which was made on the preceding Friday that a vote on Virginia should be taken on the following Monday, some Senators had acted in bad faith and with utter disregard of their obligations.

Mr. EDMUNDS said the agreement was to vote upon a particular bill at a particular time; but when that time arrived the bill had been substituted by another, and was no longer before the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL said the Senate and House Virginia bills were substantially identical, and that his understanding of the agreement which had been made was that a final vote upon the subject was to be had at the time indicated.

By his request, the Clerk read the bills, in order to show their similarity.

Messrs. CONKLING and CARPENTER said that the view just expressed coincided with their own understanding of the effect of the agreement.

A discussion of a conversational character ensued, during which various reasons were assigned for the failure to abide by the previous arrangement. The motion of Mr. WILSON was then rejected by yeas 23, nays 25. Finally it was informally agreed, and the agreement stated fully and distinctly by the Chair, that the subject would be finally disposed of at 4 o'clock to-morrow (Friday) afternoon; when the Senate, at 6:25 P. M., adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. HOOPER, of Utah, presented a memorial of 22,000 citizens of Utah, praying admission as a State into the Union. Referred.

Mr. MOORE, of New-Jersey, presented several petitions for a lightship on Winter Quarter Shoal, and for a lighthouse on Block Island.

BILLS INTRODUCED AND REPORTED.

The following bills, among others, were reported:

Mr. SMITH, of Oregon, introduced a bill to extend the provisions of the act for a railway from the Central Pacific Railway in California to Portland, Oregon. Referred.

Mr. BINGHAM asked leave to introduce a bill making it an offence punishable with fine and imprisonment for any person to propose to repeal the action of a State Legislature in ratifying any proposed amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS objected.

Mr. DIXON, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill to regulate appraisement and inspection of imports. Recommitted.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolutions of inquiry were offered and agreed to in reference to the diplomatic correspondence between J. WATSON WEBB, late United States Minister to Brazil, and the Brazilian Government on the subject of the wreck of the ship Canada; in reference to United States coaling station; in reference to the removal of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and as to the report of the Commissioner on Education on technical education.

Mr. GOLLADAY offered a resolution of inquiry into the right of Postmasters to refuse sending through the mails franked documents not mailed at the place where the Senator or member is residing. The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MOORE, of New-Jersey, offered a resolution of inquiry as to the relief of farmers from tax as produce brokers. Referred.

Mr. CALKIN offered a resolution of inquiry as to the contracts for transporting mails by railroad; whether they are paid by the mail or by weight. Adopted.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE offered a preamble and resolution declaring the absence of constitutional authority in the treaty-making power to absorb foreign territory until the consent of the House is given to it. Referred.

A PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, rising to a personal explanation, had read a paragraph from the St. Louis Democrat, intimating that he was largely interested in iron works, and he remarked that he had discovered the other day how this and similar misrepresentations had been made. They arose from the fact that the proprietors of the iron works at Bellefontaine, Ohio, were W. E. KELLEY & SONS, but he did not know his namesakes, and was not interested in pig iron or any other manufacture, and did not own a dollar of stock in any mining or manufacturing industry.

THE LEAGUE ISLAND NAVY YARD.

The House then resumed in the morning hour the consideration of the bill for the transfer of the Philadelphia Navy Yard to League Island.

Mr. SCOFIELD, Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who reported the bill, assured the House that he would have said nothing on the subject of the bill, had it not been for the very extraordinary speech made by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. DAWES) the other day. It seemed to him as if that gentleman had made up his mind that the bill must be defeated without regard to its merits or demerits. He described the circumstances attending the making of that speech; how the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. GARFIELD) had solemnly asked the attention of the House to it, reminding him of the "Hear ye, hear ye!" of a court crier, and how the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. WASHBURNE) took his seat beside Mr. DAWES to give him audience, reminding him of the words of the old song, describing how a certain auditor

"With emotion dull,
On the pivot of his skull,
Turned round his listening ear."

It was a picture for a painter. All this was prepared in advance; this raising a tempest to drown a fly. In this connection he alluded to the appropriation of $3,000 made the other day to enable, as he put it, the gentleman from Ohio to entertain some festive bankers of New-York, and to the circumstance of the gentleman from Wisconsin having recently got through an appropriation not $300,000 for the Rock Island Rapids, not estimated for by any of those "unworthy Departments." It had forced itself upon his conviction almost, that which had been repeatedly told him, that "the gentleman from Massachusetts had a little balance to settle with the Republican members of Pennsylvania."

Mr. DAWES—Will the gentleman be kind enough to state explicitly just what he means by the last remark?

Mr. SCOFIELD—The gentleman himself knows, I suppose, because (in a jesting way) I have told him what had been suggested; but if he insists on my stating it here, I will say that it has been hinted that the gentleman from Massachusetts was not altogether satisfied because the Republican members from Pennsylvania, in the organization of the House, had preferred a gentleman who they thought could sometimes find modes of signalizing his friendship other than by the infliction of wounds.

Mr. DAWES—Does the gentleman mean to impute any such motive as that to me in what I have done here on this floor? I ask the gentleman to answer me frankly and fairly here on this record, does he intend to impute to me any such motive in anything I have done here?

Mr. SCOFIELD—If the gentleman will not be so very sensitive and will be quiet for a few minutes he will see just how much I am imputing to him.

Mr. DAWES—The gentleman will do me the favor to answer my question.

Mr. SCOFIELD—When the gentleman was making that extraordinary speech about everything but the bill, I begged, and so did my colleagues, for a word of explanation, and it was declined. I will answer the gentleman's question in my own way, and I wish now that he would let me have the floor.

Mr. DAWES—If the gentleman will do me the favor to cease his innuendoes and to answer explicitly my interrogatory, whether he does, here in this place, as a member of the House, impute to me any such motive, he will do me justice.

Mr. SCOFIELD—If the gentleman from Massachusetts will be less nervous, and will listen to what I have to say, he will understand exactly my meaning. I have already said that although I cannot believe that the gentleman from Massachusetts was actuated by any resentment, when I saw all this preparation, and when I saw that he roamed over the whole Government to find something obnoxious, and that when he had at last awakened the indignation of the House against everything that could be criticised in all the departments; and when I saw him gather up his hostility and hurl it at the bill, which only proposed to remove an old navy yard to a new one, the conviction, I say, was almost forced upon my mind that perhaps the insinuation might have some foundation, and that is all I was saying. Mr. SCOFIELD then proceeded to review those portions of Mr. DAWES' speech criticising the economical notions of the Secretary of the Navy and the Postmaster-General.

Mr. GARFIELD said he was sorry that he had not been in the Hall when the gentleman from Pennsylvania alluded to him. He denied that when he asked to have order restored in order that the House might hear Mr. LYNCH speak, he knew what the subject of the speech was to be. As to his drawing $3,000 for interviewing certain New-York brokers, the statement was too gross to be permitted on the records of the House. Any insinuation that the Committee on Banking and Currency asked or obtained money for itself, or that it was interested there as if it was a party to any scheme of brokers, was unworthy of the House, unworthy the gentleman, and an outrageous wrong to every man who believed in investigating frauds.

Mr. SCOFIELD said that if the gentleman had heard what he said and the manner in which he had said it, it would probably have saved him some little excitement.

Mr. GARFIELD—No excitement at all, but records are records.

Mr. SCOFIELD, after disclaiming any intention to reflect on the gentleman from Ohio, remarked, in conclusion, that as to the use of the word "unworthy" by the gentlemen from Massachusetts, he took it with the kind which had always been his text, that "faithful were the wounds of a friend." That seemed to be the way in which the gentleman always signalized his friendship.

Mr. MYERS next addressed the House in support of the bill.

The morning hour expired at 1:40, and the bill went over until the morning hour of Tuesday next.

WEST POINT.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MYERS in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the Military Academy bill.

Mr. SCHENCK offered an amendment, which was agreed to, for adding to the Board of Visitors two Senators and three Representatives. The bill was reported to the House, and was passed.

PROTECTION VS. FREE TRADE.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, reported a resolution for the printing of extra copies of the report of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue—5,000 for the Senate, 12,000 for the House, and 1,000 for the Treasury Department.

In reporting the resolution Mr. LAFLIN said it did not by any means commit the Committee to either an approval or disapproval of the statements and conclusions of the report. The Committee simply recognized the fact that it was a report from a regularly established officer of the Government, and was, therefore, it should be printed as it had been for the last three or four years.

An animated discussion arose on the resolution, in which the questions of tariff and free trade were debated with considerable vehemence, the printing of the report being opposed by Messrs. CAKE, DUNNELL and MCCARTHY and ARNELL, and favored by Mr. BROOKS, of New-York. Finally, Mr. ARNELL moved to lay the resolution on the table, and called for the yeas and nays. The House refused to table the resolution—yeas 51, nays 128.

The House then seconded the previous question, and Mr. LAFLIN having an hour to close the debate, yielded portions of that time—five minutes to half an hour—to members on both sides of the question. The printing of the report was further advocated by Messrs. Mungen, Randall, Cook, Hay, Garfield, Marshall, Peters, Logan, Paine, Stevenson, Stiles, Moore, of Illinois, and Twitchell, and opposed by Messrs. Kelley, Bailey and Butler, of Massachusetts.

Mr. BROOKS, of New-York, protested against imputing unworthy motives, or the influence of British gold to Mr. WELLS, or to those who are opposed to the high-tariff principle. Members should learn to discuss questions on principles, and not resort to passion and party or personal abuse.

Mr. HAY denounced the high-tariff system as oppressing the energies of the American people, and doing more to impoverish the nation than any legislation that had ever taken place.

Mr. GARFIELD said that with two exceptions he represented as large an iron interest as any member; but if he were the enemy of the manufacturing interest, as he was not, he would vote against printing the report. If he desired to give the free trade movement in this country the greatest impulsion that he could give it by one vote, he would vote against printing this report.

Mr. MARSHALL described the effect of the high-tariff system in impoverishing the farmers of the West, paralyzing trade and driving the American merchant marine from the ocean. The masses of the people were rising up and demanding investigation and relief; and here were those who, in their blind rage, were advocating the system of legalized robbery that had been eating out the substance of the people, and were now trying to keep light and facts away from the eyes and ears of the people.

Mr. KELLEY argued against printing the report on the ground of its erroneous statements and deductions, and because it had already been printed and widely circulated by the Free Trade League.

Mr. DICKEY ridiculed the pretensions of the Special Commissioner of Revenue, and had read for the amusement of the House some extracts from a work of Mr. WELLS' entitled Familiar Science.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, said he would vote for printing the reports if the facts and figures were not so incorrect; but he could not give the sanction of his vote to such errors. For instance, the report stated that the entire real and personal wealth of the United States, earned from the beginning of the Government up to 1860 plus all the capital brought here from abroad, was equal to $14,000,000,000, and then stated that the destruction of wealth and diversion of industry caused by the war were equal to $9,000,000,000, or nine-fourteenths of the entire property of the United States. That was known to be incorrect. In calculating the cost of the war, the Commissioner had included, first, all that had been raised by taxation; second, all that the country owed, deducting the cost of civil administration; third, the State and county debts for bounties, assuming that those bounties were lost to the country; and, fourth, the pensions that were to be paid hereafter, assuming that they were also lost to the country; every one knew that they were not. The report further stated that from the decade from 1860 to 1870 the wealth of the country had increased nine thousand millions, equal to all that it lost by the war, and nine-fourteenths as much as the country had earned from the time of its settlement down to 1860. Statistics so false and illusory he would not vote to send to his constituents, and in voting against printing the report, he did so without reference to tariff or anti-tariff ideas, as he was neither a tariff nor a free trade man.

Mr. LOGAN expressed his surprise at the arguments of Messrs. BUTLER and KELLEY against the printing of the report because, in their opinion, it contained errors in faith and figures. Did they not allow speeches which they deemed far worse in doctrine to be printed in the Globe at an immense expense to the country? He had himself subscribed to the funds of a committee which had circulated the tariff speeches of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLEY—The last statement is not correct. No committee ever printed a speech of mine.

Mr. LOGAN—I am very much astonished at the gentleman getting up and saying that a certain thing is not correct. It is as easy to say that as anything else. I am not speaking of a Committee of the House.

Mr. KELLEY—No, Sir, nor any other Committee.

Mr. LOGAN—I am speaking of a Republican Committee organized in the House for political purposes.

Mr. KELLEY—So am I when I deny that it ever printed one speech of mine relating to the tariff. It did print the record of my trip through the South.

Mr. LOGAN—I want no controversy with the gentleman. A man who would make such a statement in the face of the House that knows better, can astonish nobody in opposing the printing of this report. In conclusion, he said that it was not expected that every public document should be critically correct in every particular, but if it was correct in the main this report should be printed as a public document.

The Process of "Giving Life to Mining Stocks"—An Unsuccessful "Pool" and Repudiation—Decision of Judge McCunn.

In the case of TITUS B. ELDRIDGE vs. SAMUEL C. REED, some time since argued in Superior Court, General Term, a decision has just been rendered holding the defendant liable on obligations entered into for the formation of a "pool" in mining stocks, where those obligations have passed into innocent hands. The following statement of facts and opinion of the Court, by Judge MCCUNN, will be found interesting not only in the facts it discloses, but also in the law applicable to such transactions. The Judge says:

The facts in this case, according to Mr. Reed's (the defendant's) testimony, are nearly as follows: In '67, during the time of a great mania for gold mining and other worthless stock speculations, a gentleman by the name of McKinney, a personal friend of the defendant, applied to him and desired that he (Mr. Reed) should aid in giving life to the stock of the Gold Hill Mining Company. Mr. Reed replied that he had no money, &c., &c., but finally agreed to give and did give his two notes at short runs for $2,500 each, and for which he received 1,600 shares of the Company's stock, at $3 25 per share.

The notes were given, and the stock was transferred by the following receipt given at the time:

Received from Samuel C. Reed, Esq., his note.

Jan. 4, forty days date, to order of A. McKinney.$2,600

Total.....$5,200

with 100 shares of the "Hardway Bolt, Spike and Rivet Manufacturing Company" as collateral for 1,600 shares of the Gold Hill Mining Company of Colorado.

At the expiration of the notes they were taken up without argument.

Mr. CHAUNCEY SHAFFER, appeared for plaintiff, and ANDREW MCKINNEY, Esq., and ALFRED ELDRIDGE, Esq., for defendant.

NEW-YORK, Jan. 5, 1867.

The stock was left by Mr. Reed with Mr. Walker, who was intrusted with the scheme, and who was forming the company. Mr. Reed, in his testimony at folio 121, says that "McKinney took the notes, and that he (McKinney) was to guarantee them to me." He says, at folio 122, "that Mr. McKinney told him (Mr. Reed) that from the sale of the stock, and he says that then they proposed to buy and sell it; and then, he says, we are going to sell the mine, and the mine itself was worth more than was existing me."

Mr. Reed also testifies, at folio 126, that Mr. McKinney remarked that "he had used up his own means, and wanted somebody else to help him to hold the stock, and that it would enable the three parties (Walker, McKinney, Wolcott, Eustice and Reed) to control the entire stock."

Under the circumstances I have detailed, the 1,600 shares were taken by Mr. Reed, and were left in Walker's hands, and with his consent and knowledge, the entire pool was placed under the control of Walker, and by him put upon the market; fictitious sales were made, (wash sales, as they are called.) At last the scheme collapsed, and Mr. Reed was called upon to pay the notes. At first he pleaded for time, proposing to give the mortgage in question if the time were granted. The time was granted, the mortgage given, and Eldridge, the plaintiff, advanced the money and took up the notes of Reed, and received the mortgage as collateral. The mortgage was given for about $196 more than the notes, of which Mr. Reed received $130 in cash, and these 66 were paid Eldridge for nothing title.

Mr. Reed now says that he was fraudulently induced by Mr. McKinney to enter into the transaction, that the whole thing was tainted with fraud from the start, and that the $66 allowed Eldridge was a usurious charge; therefore, he, Mr. Eldridge, cannot recover in this action. We fail to see it in that light. We regard the whole scheme as one entered into by reckless men, for the purpose of acquiring speedy fortunes at the expense of an easily deceived public, and that Mr. Reed, the defendant, is as little to be pitied as any of those connected with the affair.

That he gave his notes with the knowledge that a corner, as they call it, would be made, and with the belief that the stock would rise, and that he would thereby make money, and would be enabled to protect his notes, is clear. The undertaking signally failed, and this Court should not for a moment lend its powers to enable him to repudiate his obligations, especially when these obligations are fair on their face, and are in the hands of innocent holders.

We are of opinion that the $66 charged by Mr. Eldridge was a fair and proper charge, and was not in any sense of the word usurious. Eldridge testifies that he advanced the whole amount of the notes, and that Wolcott gave him back this sum to cover his expenses in searching. Wolcott corroborates this fully in his testimony taken at Boston, and this, to our minds, is the correct view.

But suppose the keeping by Mr. Eldridge of the $66 was not to cover his expenses, and that in law he was not entitled to retain that sum; that doing so was an usurious act; this will not taint the original transaction.

If the renewal is given in part for a valid debt, that portion of the debt (I mean the valid portion) is not destroyed by usury in the new security. (Hamman vs. Hopping, 13 Wen. 505; Swartout vs. Pain, 19 Johnson, 294; Bush vs. Livingston, 2 Cal. Cases, 66.) Indeed, the book abounds with cases to this point, so much so that the principle is now almost elementary.

To enable a party to avoid himself of such a defence he must show, presumptively at least, the usurious intent, because usury consists in the corrupt bargain between the parties by which more than the legal rate is to be paid (Nerrills vs. Law, 19 Cowen, 65; Pomroy vs. Ainsworth, 22 Barb., 118.)

The supreme test in cases of this kind is, whether fraud was intended; and the old and later doctrine is, that intention must be inferred from acts. But in this case the facts as developed by Mr. Reed himself are too vague for the purpose of inference. The only dealings he had with any one was with Mr. McKinney, and certainly if his statement about his interview with McKinney be correct, there was no fraud intended, for he states positively that Mr. McKinney agreed to indemnify him (Reed) if the scheme should fail, and that it was upon the truth and strength of this statement he gave the notes.

Mr. McKinney is a stock jobber and Mr. Reed is an eminent counselor, and is presumed to understand the law in such cases; he is also presumed to be as careful about his own affairs as Mr. McKinney. Under these circumstances it is hard to say where a criminal concealment or liability on the part of one or both begins or where it ends. I say criminal liability; I mean this in its literal sense, because if Mr. Reed's story be true—and as far as this case goes, I take his statement as confessed—both the parties would have been guilty of a crime in aiding and floating a fraudulent stock for the purpose of gains to themselves and of serious destruction to others.

Again granting that the statements of Mr. McKinney in this case were highly colored, and that he may have deceived Reed in the simple belief of honesty and good faith, yet the question remains to be answered, did he (McKinney) actually intend fraud on Mr. Reed, or did he and Mr. Reed, together with others, intend fraud on the public at large in the stock? We think the latter was intended, and that Mr. Reed understood all that was stated by McKinney and his friends perfectly.

In the great case of the Royal British Bank, the late Lord Chief Justice Campbell showed forcibly enough that when shareholders and outsiders are plundered, and when the directors and schemers divide the plunder, then criminality would attach; but once out of the path, and allow some of the parties who had to do with the scheme come into Court and complain that, in concocting that scheme, they were induced by their co-adjutors, or co-conspirators, to do the plaintiff a helping hand—and ask for their money back from those same co-conspirators, then I say we leave the great high way of justice and fair dealing and strike out amid thorns and brambles.

In this case Mr. McKinney could not have intended fraud upon Mr. Reed—he was Reed's personal friend; he had thrown his own money into the gulf.

When a man, not ignorant of such things, enters into a trade or transaction of this kind, with his eyes wide open, and with a full knowledge of what he is about, he has no right to quarrel with the managers he has appointed, or the men with whom he has intrusted his money, if it should turn out that they had been unfortunate or ill advised in their speculations. The real question in the case is not, whether there was a conspiracy to deceive the public into buying something different in the shape of stocks from what they had a right to suppose they were buying, but whether that offence, if committed, can be taken advantage of by Mr. Reed as against his co-conspirators, so as to relieve him liable on certain notes given to some of his friends to enable them to float the stock and to form the corner, and which notes are now held by innocent parties.

It does not appear material or become material whether these men were dealing honestly with each other or not, if they knew and they did not conceal, or did not misrepresent facts to Mr. Reed, and he gave his notes with this knowledge. No matter what was the intended fraud meant for shareholders or buyers, he is responsible. It is of little use to the defendant to prove a disposition on the part of his co-stockholders to withhold a knowledge on their part, or a purposed concealment of the condition or value of the mine or the stock, unless he can disprove a knowledge on his own part of purposed concealment of facts, from which intended shareholders would have been likely to be able to infer for themselves that the business was a fraud. Indeed, the fraud must not only show concealment on the part of Mr. McKinney and his associates, but he must prove a criminal concealment of such material facts, with a view both to deceive and defraud him. Now, this he has not done; on the contrary, as we have stated, he shows conclusively that Mr. McKinney had led him into the secret of what they were going to do with the stock, and that he had agreed to amply indemnify him. It will never do for courts of justice to allow getters up of such companies as this Gold Hill Company to deceive the public with impunity, and then when their schemes fail to allow them to repudiate the few contracts they have made with each other, and which seem on their face fair, especially when such contracts have fallen into the hands of innocent holders for a full consideration.

When men are once aware that their own prudence will and must protect them, inasmuch as the law cannot, they will be very cautious how they give up their interests to enterprises which do not offer satisfactory guarantees of honesty and stability; and when it is known that stockholders, organizers, directors and others who aid in such companies, and who publish false statements and prospectuses, or who lend themselves in any way to such acts, thereby inducing the public to become shareholders, are subject to lose all the money they invest in the enterprise, and are as well liable for their obligations, and also criminally liable, they will pause before they proceed in such matters.

A few impressive examples like this will teach Mr. Reed and others that extraordinary profits cannot be obtained without extraordinary risks; that it is unsafe to trust to the representations of friends or to names, however high our confidences may be in them; that it is dangerous to embark in enterprises of which they cannot comprehend the scope, and in the management of which they cannot have any share.

For the above reasons the judgment should be reversed.

Judge FITHIAN concurred in this opinion.

The German Hospital.

The trustees of the German Hospital and Dispensary of this City held their regular monthly meeting at No. 13 Broadway yesterday afternoon. PATENT HOOP-SKIRT MACHINE—INFRINGEMENT.

Jedediah Wilcox vs. Albert Kemp.—This was a suit in equity for an injunction and an account of profits and damages for the alleged infringement of reissued letters patent No. 1,744, granted to the plaintiff, dated July 14, 1868, for an improvement in hoop-skirt machines. The defendant wholly fails to show that anything that Wilmot did in the way of inventing or constructing a machine like Mann's was in any way made known to Mann before he made his invention, or that Wilmot's operations amounted to anything more than a mere experiment which was abandoned. That the machine of the defendant has appropriated bodily the devices covered by the patents of the plaintiff, and infringes upon the claims of those patents in the respects alleged by the plaintiff, except as regards the first claim of the patent for improvements issued to Joseph Bard, which is not infringed. That there is nothing in the previous patents relied on by the defence which anticipates the claims of the patents infringed, as the machines covered by them were constructed for a different purpose, and operated in substantially different manner from the machine covered by the plaintiff's patents. Decree in favor of the plaintiff for a perpetual injunction and an account of profits as regards the first three claims of the Mann patent, and the third claim of the Baird patent, and for costs.

For the plaintiff, J. B. Staples; for the defendant, J. Van Santvoord.

SUPERIOR COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART I—JAN. 20.

Before Judge McCunn and a Jury.

DAMAGES FOR THE DEATH OF A LITTLE GIRL.

Sarah Prial, Administratrix of Cecilia Prial, vs. The Central Park, North and East River Railroad Company.—The plaintiff sues to recover for the loss of her child, a girl of 10 years, alleged to have been killed through the carelessness of the agents of the defendant, the damages being laid at the limit of the statute, $5,000. The circumstances of the case, as they appeared on the trial, are as follows: On the 27th of August, 1868, Cecilia Prial, the child of plaintiff, while passing over the street crossing at the corner of Sixteenth-street and Avenue A, came in contact with car No. 51 of defendants' line, and by it run over and killed. It appeared in testimony among other things, that the girl started from one curb to go to the other, walked a portion of the way, and when the car was about sixteen feet from the crossing she started to run across, a distance of eighteen feet, in front of the car which was going at ordinary speed. When the testimony on the part of the plaintiff was in, counsel for the Company moved for a non-suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to show either carelessness or misconduct on the part of the defendants' agents, or that the little girl was not on her part guilty of contributive negligence. The Court held that in cases of this character the plaintiff is bound to prove affirmatively freedom from negligence on the part of the person injured, and the existence of negligence on the part of defendant, in order to make a prima facie case. The motion to non-suit was granted accordingly, and the complaint dismissed.

Charles S. Spencer for plaintiff; A. J. Vanderpool for defendant.

MARINE COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART II.

Before Judge Curtis and a Jury.

SUIT BY BROKER FOR COMMISSIONS.

Asenheimer vs. McMaster.—The plaintiff in this action claimed $200 as commissions upon the sale of three lots in Brooklyn. He testified that he had been employed by one Rothmann to sell for him some property in New-York; that the defendant offered to take the property and to convey the Brooklyn property to Rothmann in part payment, and specifically promised the plaintiff to pay him a commission of one per cent. on the value of the Brooklyn lots in case Rothmann should be induced to accept them in exchange. It was conceded that the exchange was effected and the mutual conveyances made, and that the plaintiff had received a commission from Rothmann.

At the close of the plaintiff's case the defendant's counsel moved to dismiss the complaint, on the ground that the same broker could not act for both contracting parties in the same transaction, and that in this case the plaintiff had (or claimed to) acted for and had received the commission from the other side.

The Judge overruled this point and the defendant's case proceeded, in the course of which the specific contract for compensation testified to by the plaintiff was absolutely denied.

The case was submitted to the jury, who rendered a verdict for the defendant.

Mr. Otto Meyer for plaintiff; Mr. James A. Seaman for defendant.

COURT OF SPECIAL SESSIONS.

Before Justices Bixby and Dowling.

Most of the charges with which this Court had to deal yesterday were confined to petty larceny and assault.

A BAD OLD MAN AND A WAYWARD GIRL.

An old, gray-haired man, named Charles Millivas, was placed on trial for having, it was alleged, written threatening and indecent letters to a girl named Sarah M. Calbar, aged about 16 years, residing in Grand-street. The latter said that she became acquainted with the accused about two years ago; that she subsequently accompanied him to oyster saloons, but that she never went with him for an improper place. She also declared that he had made indecent proposals to her, but that she had rejected them. Three photographs, representing the witness, were then produced, and were shown to have been found in defendant's possession. Letters written by the witness to the prisoner, and signed "Pet," were also introduced in evidence. Justice Dowling decided that the girl was partially to blame in the matter, thereupon discharging the prisoner, after reminding him that he was before the Court on a similar charge two years ago, and that he had better be more careful in the future.

THURSDAY, Jan. 20—P. M.

The advices from Washington and the course of the extreme Free Trade Press, lead us to fear that the Tariff question will be done away with at the next session of Congress. There is an unwillingness to move in the matter until the fact is clearly ascertained that the importations for the present and succeeding fiscal year will be fully maintained, as compared with the Fiscal Year of 1869, ending on the 30th of June last. Our own belief is that they will be, and the chances are in favor of an increase in the value of Foreign Merchandise marketed

CONGRESS.

At the opening of the Senate yesterday the statue of General NATHANIEL GREENE, of Revolutionary fame, was formally presented to Congress by Senator ANTHONY, in the name of the State of Rhode Island, and he took occasion to address the Senate on the life and character of the old hero. Messrs. SUMNER, SAWYER and MORRILL followed Mr. ANTHONY. Concurrent resolutions were adopted accepting the statute and thanking the Governor of the State and the people for the valuable gift. Several new bills were introduced, among them one incorporating a Telegraph Postal Company with peculiar duties and powers. The Virginia bill was taken up and a long debate ensued, but without final action upon it the Senate, at 6:25 P. M., adjourned. It was, however, agreed that to-day at 4 P. M. the vote should be taken.

In the House a petition was presented signed by 22,000 citizens of Utah, praying for admission as a State. A number of bills, the majority of them of no public importance, were introduced. One, offered by Mr. BINGHAM, provides for making it a penal offence for any person to propose to repeal the action of a State Legislature in ratifying any proposed constitutional amendment. Among the resolutions was one declaring the absence of constitutional authority in making treaties which involve the absorption of foreign territory, without the consent of the House. The League Island Navy Yard bill was taken up and discussed during the morning hour; Mr. SCOFIELD spoke at length in reply to the recent speech of Mr. DAWES on this subject. In Committee of the Whole the West Point Academy bill was considered. An amendment for adding two Senators and three Representatives to the Board of Visitors was agreed to, and the bill was then reported to the House and there passed. A resolution reported from the Printing Committee in regard to printing a large number of the reports of the Special Commissioner of Revenue, led to a long discussion on the subject of tariff versus free trade, in which a general interchange of views took place. The House refused to table the resolution by a vote of 51 to 128, and under the previous question it was adopted without a division. At 4:30 the House adjourned.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

In the Senate, yesterday, the annual report of the Prison Association was received and ordered printed. Mr. MURPHY reported the bill to revise the Statutes of the State; and Mr. CAULDWELL introduced a bill allowing the construction of certain railways in the City and County of New-York and across the Harlem River. The bill chartering the Lenox Library was passed. The bill to repeal the New-York City Excise law was considered in Committee of the Whole, and progress reported. Mr. CREAMER gave notice of a bill to repeal the act creating the Metropolitan Police District, and providing for the election of three Police Commissioners in New-York. But little business of general interest was transacted, and the Senate adjourned.

In the Assembly, of the bills reported, was one allowing the construction of new gas works in this City. A series of resolutions in favor of Cuba were also reported, but, on motion of Mr. MITCHELL, they were recommitted. Among the bills introduced were the following: to repeal the act exempting ministers from taxation; to set apart a portion of the Brooklyn Park for the Twenty-third Regiment New-York National Guard; for the election of a Commissioner and the establishment of a Police force in Brooklyn; to repeal the act to prevent cruelty to animals in New-York; to extend Irving-place in this City in a southerly direction; to sell the Seamen's Retreat at Staten Island; to regulate the brokerage business, and to locate a new State Prison and remove the one at Sing Sing. A resolution to pay in gold the State debt, incurred prior to 1862, was referred. The resolution in regard to the Committee to attend the Peabody obsequies was amended so as to consist of three Senators and five members of the House. A motion was agreed to that the Committee pay its own expenses. The Senate bill incorporating the Lenox Library was passed.

GENERAL.

Mexican advices by the way of Mazatlan and San Francisco, Cal., show an unsettled state of public affairs. Revolutions in several States, it is said, are imminent, and the hatred of Mexicans towards foreigners is represented to be intense. LUBADA had raised his standard at Tepic, and a convention had been called for the 15th ult., to form general laws for the Government.

A cable dispatch from London states that the advices from Rio Janeiro to the 31st ult. are to the effect that LOPEZ has again taken the field in Paraguay with a force of 5,000 whites and 15,000 Indians, and stopped the advance of Brazilian troops.

Ex-Secretary SEWARD was serenaded on Tuesday evening at Havana by the different volunteer battalions. Colonel ZULUETA made a speech of welcome, to which Mr. SEWARD briefly replied. In his remarks he was strictly noncommittal on the subject of the insurrection.

Ten of the Spanish gunboats recently arrived at Havana, according to a dispatch from that city, have again put to sea, but their destination is unknown.

The Society of California Pioneers is about to erect a building for the use of the association in San Francisco.

The Chinese quarter in the Town of San Jose, Cal., was destroyed by fire on Saturday last, and 1,000 of the inhabitants were rendered homeless.

A severe earthquake shock was felt at San Bernardino, Cal., on the 14th inst.

The verdict of the jury in the case of WARREN FELLOWS, charged with the murder of SWINTON, at Port Jervis, was murder in the second degree, and the prisoner was sentenced to State Prison for twenty years.

The Kline Iron Works, OAKLEY, CLAPP & CO., proprietors, located at Horseheads, six miles from Elmira, this State, was destroyed by fire yesterday morning. Loss, $30,000; insurance, $18,000.

DERRY has proposed to RUDOLPH, of Chicago, to play for the champion billiard cue in San Francisco, on the 15th of next month, and to pay RUDOLPH'S expenses. If this proposition is not accepted, the game will be played in this City on the 8th of April.

Advices from the Sandwich Islands to the 4th inst., have been received at San Francisco, by the Idaho, from Honolulu. The Austrian Embassy to China were among the passengers. They had been received by the KING at the latter city. Dr. HOFFMAN has been appointed Austrian Consul. A terrific gale visited the islands recently, and the Austrian frigate Donau was cast ashore.

It is again asserted in San Francisco that the Central Pacific Railroad has purchased the California Pacific Road for $6,000,000.

The Peril to American Credit Abroad.

One swallow does not make a Summer, but we are apt to think of Summer weather when the swallows are in the sky. So when our English friends see FISK and GOULD careering over the financial horizon, we must not be surprised at their apprehensions. Nothing is more conservative than money. The instinct of gain is based upon security, and when security trembles, credit dies. The disheartening fact is that the credit of England is twice as good as that of the United States, while her resources are not proportionately larger and do not compare with our own in prospective development. Brother Jonathan is rich, and will be richer; but he has an ill name, and when he goes into foreign exchanges is in no higher repute than a Russian or a Brazilian. Not only is England's paper twice as good, but his credit does not rank with that of mercurial, unsteady France. He may point to his mines and cotton fields, and mighty possessions, and dwell with exultation upon the glory and power and wealth that must there find future dominion. There will be one answer: "We have no money to lend at English rates to a people whose railway magnate is FISK, and we want good interest before advancing credit to a people who are in the habit of discussing repudiation!"

We may rebel at this, but we cannot very well question it. Honest men will say: "This Erie dominion is an accident. Its rulers are outcasts. Good men do not deal with them. They have no standing in the street. No banker will lend a dollar on their bonds, or buy their shares except at a fancy price." All of this is true, but unfortunately foreign merchants do not gauge their commercial estimate of people by the ethics of the counting house. They only see Governors, Judges, the Press and men in high station, all combining to aid FISK and GOULD in doing with impunity what would lead to transportation in England and to the galleys in France. They remember Mississippi and repudiation, and they have read in stately and specious rhetoric President JOHNSON'S argument in favor of dishonoring the national debt! They hear a noisy and vigilant party avowing repudiation! They distrust our large rates of interest. A people that will charge each other ten and fifteen per cent. for money even when money is easy, must have reasons making it unsafe to lend at five or six per cent. Sir CURTIS LAMPSON gave the best cause for foreign distrust when he arraigned Governor HOFFMAN for signing that most iniquitous Erie bill,—a bill, which construed into plain English, should have been called "An act for legalizing robbery, fraud, and false pretence, and for perpetuating in the hands of men guilty of these offences their ill-gotten power." It was a bill which violated the moral sense of the community, and could only have one effect abroad. That effect was to paralyze and depreciate all private American credit with foreign merchants.

American credit is dethroned in foreign markets! We may take the best railway bonds to France and England and Germany, and we cannot sell them at their true value. Now and then we may dispose of securities worth intrinsically a hundred cents on the dollar, bearing large interest, and as secure as any in the world, for one-half or two-thirds of their real value. That is not a sale but a sacrifice! It is the penalty we must pay for legalizing highway robbery. Somehow the moneyed world gets back to rude Indian notions in its business affairs. Because one white man robbed an Indian of his game and his ponies, and escaped without being scalped, it is the Indian's purpose to exact the scalps of all other white men who come in his way. So we receive Indian courtesy when we go abroad with our bonds and mortgages. Men see that the Erie Railway was, in the beginning, a noble enterprise, well-conceived, full of profit, and promising benefit to New-York and the country. They know that when it was built our best people invested their means with its projectors as a national duty. They saw it drift into the hands of gamblers, adventurers and knaves. They saw it pass step by step through degrading and disheartening influences,—from the hands of men like Mr. DREW, who merely used it to make money, without entirely ignoring vested rights,—into the hands of the present directors, who regard it as their own tenement and preserve, and consider no rights but those of unlawful possession. They see that this shameful misappropriation and seizure of property is by the direct aid of the Courts. In all countries, no matter what form of government, Justice is property's last and sacred asylum. "The King dare not take my barn," said an old German peasant to a menacing agent of FREDERICK, who insisted he must sell. "And why," was the answer, "is His Majesty not all powerful?" "Yes, but I will appeal to the High Court in Berlin!" And it is said the despot was well pleased to know that under his stern government the ministers of law retained majesty and commanded respect. Here, in free America, we have no such assurance! The Masters of Erie not only have a Legislature to proclaim their decrees, and a Governor to execute them, but when outraged property flies for succor to supreme and holy Justice—sitting in serene and sweet benignity high over railway and representatives and Chief Magistrate—Justice is found in the cushioned and tapestried cloisters of the Masters' gaudy opera house—flushed with wine and good fellowship—and eager to sign their writs and do their bidding. All of this we have seen in the shameful history of the Erie Railroad. What its masters have done with that noble franchise other men may do with any railroad in America—for HOFFMAN is Governor and BARNARD is upon the bench, and leading lawyers' eloquent lips still move to golden retainers, and men go to Albany in 1870 of the same bone and marrow as MATTOON and his fellow corlies, who clustered around JAY GOULD and his "black bag" in 1868 and 1869. Can we say to Sir CURTIS LAMPSON and our friends in London that what we see to-day in the management of Erie we may not see to-morrow in the management of any other road? Do we not know that the Masters of Erie are masters of the Executive, the Judiciary and the Legislature, and that with this imperial trinity they are puissant and aggressive? What they have done they may do. They have conquered Erie, and to-morrow they may covet our richest franchise. Rob Roy would have pillaged all the way to London City, if he could have had safe conduct from the King, and been secure of an injunction against his victims when he reached Westminster.

Should we marvel that with this fearful example our credit should be sick and forlorn and utterly despised in foreign markets? Is it not pitiful that honest men with good securities should be taxed and punished by foreign money lenders because of FISK and GOULD and their troupe of Governors and Judges and negro minstrels and dancing women? With us is the cause,—and with us is the remedy. We cannot keep a house of infamy, and expect to be free from reproach. We elect this Governor and these Judges, and we permit the Governor to look with hopeful and not altogether uncertain eyes upon the Presidency. We surround them with the organization of a powerful and, perhaps, dominant party. We say to the world,—it is not impossible that he who did the bidding of the Masters of Erie, even to confirming them in the possession of stolen goods and chattels, may one day be President of the United States! We gave you ANDREW JOHNSON, who wished to repudiate the debt, and we may give you JOHN T. HOFFMAN, who will probably put BARNARD in the place of Mr. CHASE, and make GOULD the receiver of as many roads as he cares to manage. Such things are possible so long as the people are silent. But while we submit in silence should we complain because our silence is misunderstood in other lands, and men hesitate to believe in a responsibility we are too weak or too apathetic to sustain?

It is painful to write this! The thoughts it suggests are full of shame and grief. American Credit is dying abroad, because we have permitted ruffians to slay it at home. There is but one remedy, and even at the best it is—slow and bitter. Shall we adopt it?

What Democratic "Economy" Means—Increase of Salaries.

The first fruits of the Tammany policy in this State are before us, in the shape of a wholesale measure for "increasing salaries." We in the City of New-York are accustomed to the leading Ring ideas, prominent among which is the one just referred to. We had, of course, expected that when the paternal sway of Tammany should be extended over the whole State, and guide legislation at Albany as it has guided civic ordinances, some of its "institutions" would be transplanted. We confess, however, we did not expect quite so early a raid on the public money in the interests of party.

In his recent Message Governor HOFFMAN announced to the Legislature that "its special duty" was to "secure a more prudent, honest and economical home government." The Tammany way of going to work in this direction is to be found in the Assembly bill increasing the pay of all the employes in the different departments of the State Government. Governor HOFFMAN was specially indignant at the "costly body of officials" whom he charged the National Government with employing. And we suppose that the proper comment on this indignation is the additional bill promised us by Mr. JACOBS for increasing the wages of all the laborers employed by the State.

Seriously, is not this thing carried far enough? And has not the Democratic Party made a bid strong enough for the workingmen's votes by the introduction of this scheme, without actually depleting the Treasury? For, of course, it is merely a bid for votes, and a more direct and palpable one has not lately been made. It is the old Tammany policy over again,—to increase the patronage power at its disposal, and to buy the services of so many more henchmen, by using not their own money, but the people's money, for the purpose. It is so easy to be profuse with public funds, generosity is so easy with other people's money, that the device is neither a new nor a great one; but it is one which the Democracy have already made sufficiently familiar to us without carrying it to further extremes.

One of the main ideas of the leaders of the Democracy this Winter seems to be to so legislate as not, at least, to lose any votes. Governor HOFFMAN'S Message skillfully "touched the popular pulse" by appealing to several special classes, and the legislation thus far seems to have had an eye to the same end. But, after all, this friendly, money-voting policy has its drawbacks. As the number to be benefited by increasing salaries is very small, and the number to be made indignant by it is very great, we doubt whether as a scheme for catching votes it is likely to prove successful. It is the old question, whether the people who pay taxes are most to be conciliated, or the people who hold offices and draw salaries. The bill now in the Assembly and the one about to be offered, seem to have chosen the latter class as the first to be experimented upon; but we believe with our Albany correspondent that "perhaps the workingmen who are not so fortunate as to be in the State's employ, will fail to see the point of this legislative joke." Meanwhile, we wait with curiosity to see what shape the Tammany desire for "economy" will take next in raiding upon the public Treasury.

Mr. Cassius M. Clay as the Modern Persens.

If anything could make us sympathize with "poor Cuba" more thoroughly than we have hitherto done, it would be the conduct of her avowed champions. They fall upon her neck in pretended friendship, only to give her a secret stab in the back. As we cordially wish to see the independence party succeed, we entreat it to get rid of nearly all its present advocates. One set persists in throwing mud at the Secretary of State, and in mumbling over a stupid series of slanders on his family connections—slanders which have no wit or novelty to recommend them, and which, as everybody knows, have been unanswerably disproved. What is the effect of this? Naturally to create astonishment that the Cubans should be so shamefully unscrupulous in choosing their instruments. But still greater wrongs have been done to the insurgents. Public meetings have been called in their name, and every true friend of Cuba has been covered with mortification to witness the result. The public have held aloof. Leading men of all classes have naturally imitated their example. What miserable infatuation was it which led to a repetition of the farce on Wednesday night? People know all about it by this time, and only one new actor appeared to give variety to the melancholy performance. There is Cuba, bound to the rock, while the Spanish dragon prepares to swallow her at a mouthful. We hold our breath with expectation. Is there no one to save her? We are told to go to Cooper Institute, and the secrets of fate shall be revealed to us. Of course, we repair to the abode of the oracle, and what do we behold? A well-known journalist in the chair, like the seraph that sits up aloft, and Mr. CASSIUS M. CLAY panting with eagerness to distinguish himself as the Perseus of the nineteenth century.

We must say for the Chairman that he evidently meant to do no harm. His remarks were of an artless and innocent character, and except that he has taught us elsewhere that it is very wicked to differ in any respect from any member of the Administration, we should admire his firmness in proclaiming the principle that it is "the privilege and right of the American people to instruct their Government"—except, we suppose, on financial subjects. But after the lamb there enters the lion. Mr. CASSIUS M. CLAY is the most formidable friend any cause could well have. Need we say that he began his speech upon Cuba by giving the audience a complete retrospect of his past life? That is the inevitable overture to a performance by Mr. CASSIUS M. CLAY, the "terror of princes." Has he not cast proud defiance at the despots of the universe? He has been absent eight years. What change does he find? Why, "the image of King GEORGE has been removed, and the portrait of GEORGE WASHINGTON hangs at the door." And that metamorphosis has been effected in eight years, a period during which Mr. CLAY modestly declares that he has grown "older if not wiser." It is the common lot. Comparatively few people do grow wiser as they grow older, and therefore Mr. CLAY need not think that he is sitting alone on the stool of repentance.

What is the first topic to discuss when a man has to make a speech on Cuba? Manifestly the perfidy of England and the incompetency of Mr. SEWARD, considered in their connection with Mr. CASSIUS M. CLAY'S unparalleled services to his countrymen and their ingratitude towards him. There we have a fine field for thought. The first step towards the deliverance of the Cuban Andromeda, is the canonization of her Kentucky Perseus. Does any one want to hear Mr. CLAY'S "case" in a few words? Here it is, quoted literally from the Tribune: "Why, Sir, I recall a most illustrious passage in English history, the liberating of the slaves and now when following under our leadership and advice it has been again in season and out of season. That, fellow citizens, is my defence, if that be a defence." There is no "if" in the matter. What Mr. CLAY means we have not the faintest idea, but we are quite willing to certify that he is not guilty.

The removal of King GEORGE'S statue is not the only event of the past eight years. President GRANT has disappeared. "I have here, Sir," said Mr CASSIUS M. CLAY, "an extract from the late President GRANT'S message." The audience laughed—so did the people when Rip Van Winkle came back to his native place. But presently the audience began to hiss, as well as laugh, and under that trial, Mr. CLAY lost his presence of mind—if it be not profane to suppose such a thing possible. He touched subject after subject, but the company would not listen. They wanted to hear something about Cuba. The reason of their discontent, we need hardly explain, was that they were not in the secret. They were not aware that they had been invited to listen to a few crotchets, and to hear a statement of personal grievances. What great man has not a grievance? The least we inferior creatures can do is to listen to it. Mr. CASSIUS M. CLAY has done us all a favor in stating his wrongs, and we deeply regret that they have been reported in a totally unintelligible form. But what a mockery is the whole performance of "poor Cuba!" Could the bitterest malice go further? What sin have the Cubans committed to deserve this punishment? Might they not fairly plead to be allowed to fight out their battle in their own way, unencumbered by the "help" which is now dragging them down?

The Gas Nuisance and the Board of Health.

It is now nearly four years since the New-York gas supply became the subject of loud and earnest complaint. Ever since that time the companies have been continually charged with bad faith in the fulfillment of their contracts, and with a total indifference to public comfort and health. There were numerous investigations of the subject by officials and one by an Albany committee. The existing evils could not be denied, and they were capable of remedy. But the gas nuisance is as scandalous as ever, and the Board of Health has once more renewed the contest for its abatement.

The Metropolitan Company, it was announced at the last meeting of the Health Board, had abandoned all efforts to introduce new processes into their works, by which the quality of their gas might be improved. The other companies have not gone quite so far as this, but endeavor to befog the subject by representing improved methods of gas purification as something too doubtful and difficult for anything beyond mere discussion. The plea is absurd, as they very well know. The manufacture of gas is no new art, and the processes by which its purity can be assured were ascertained long ago. There is no such foul vapor, as New-York is compelled to breathe in the form of gas, in other cities. Nowhere but here are rooms lighted by it rendered poisonous. No logic, no bewildering scientific talk, or technical analyses, can get over the one fact, that other people have good and healthy gas, and New-York people have it not.

The Board of Health, however, still lives, although there is no knowing how long that can be said of it. It has a plain duty before it, from which we trust it will not shrink. The act by which the Board was created defines its office to be, among other things, "for the preservation of life and health." Such a powerful influence against both as impure gas comes within the range of its operations, just as clearly as the cleaning of tenement houses, or the encouragement of vaccination. It has earned the public gratitude by its activity in many ways, and it can earn still more by persistent effort, with all the legal power that it can use, to bring the wholesale poisoning of the City to an end.

The Journalist's Millennium.

The public ought to be very proud of the journalism of the present day. It has reached an unexampled pitch of perfection. It spares no one, and it has a finger, to quote the homely adage, in everybody's pie. It tells us all about private affairs, and orders up women for punishment with quite as much boldness and courage as if they were men. Is it any wonder that those who make journalism what it is, elaim to be ranked as a "profession," and exact the obsequious attentions of society?

The fact is that the journalist is not only the regenerator of the age, and the great reformer of manners, but he is in a fair way to sweep all the institutions of an exploded civilization before him. The world never can foresee the results of a great invention when it is first discovered. There were people who laughed at the steam engine, and treated the electric telegraph with contempt. So it is with that triumph of modern genius, the art of interviewing. Some affected persons pretend to hold up their hands in horror at it. Was there ever such a piece of nonsense? The "interviewer" is already as good as a Judge and better than a jury. If any one doubts it, let him ponder the story told by the Bangor correspondent of the Boston Post. There was a man in Maine who shot a woman. For this he was put into prison. He denied his guilt, but the reporter got him in his fearful grasp, and held him with his glittering eye, and squeezed the truth out of him. In France, as we showed yesterday, they let the President of a Court do the work. They order these things better in Maine.

The reporter asked the murderer, whose name was LAWRENCE, every question that he could think of bearing on the crime. Did he love the woman? How long had he loved her?—did he want to marry her?—"when did you make up your mind to commit the horrid deed?"—was he drunk at the time?—did he make up his mind to cut his own throat afterwards? These and other questions were put to the prisoner, and he answered them all. How could he do otherwise? He appreciated the power of the Press. He was aware that when we want news we will have it regardless of cost—and of everything else. LAWRENCE felt that it was all over with him when a reporter entered the room. Does not the Press possess autocratic power? And are not all journalists high-minded gentlemen? We should like to know where LAWRENCE could have found a better friend than the reporter. To be sure he is likely to be condemned on the confession extracted from him. But what is one man's life, or the principles of justice, when a great system is involved? If we journalists like to do the work of hangman, what is to restrain us? Certainly not any squeamishness on our part. The truth is that we must keep up with the age. We are bound to distance each other, and to find a new "sensation" every morning. "Interviewing" is one of the means we employ to accomplish this end. Even in Maine it can find out the prisoner in his cell and make his miserable soul quake within him. Every journalist feels exalted in the presence of such splendid feats. We adjure our fellow laborers to go on. The day will come when we shall be honored above all other powers and potentates, and when people will regard our boots—even ours—with the affectionate adoration which they are now ready to lavish upon Prince ARTHUR'S.

About the Weather.

For several weeks we have been passing through one of those abnormal seasons which appear to defy all human explanation. Not only at New-York, but throughout the continent, Nature's course seems disturbed. Central Virginia, a few nights ago, received, in thunder storms, the shock of the elements whose violence had been poured out in central Kentucky and Tennessee; and the storm in its might appears, according to telegraphic reports, to have swept northward over the lakes, and visited Buffalo. Our meteorologists are beginning to unravel the mysteries of these grand phenomena, and to approximate their conditions, and to map their course. But the long continuance of the present vernal weather seems inexplicable by any single storm or tempest, however violent. The great storm of March 14, 1859, which struck the coast first at Galvestop, Texas, was only three days in making its march to the Lakes and to Nova Scotia. According to Professor DOVE, the distinguished German meteorologist, his country, a few years ago, experienced a remarkable Winter, enjoying a tropical temperature till the 8th or 10th of January, after which came intense cold. But the often-observed periodicity of remarkable weather, and the return in cycles of the great meterological phenomena that alarm us by their infrequency, may, after all, be the solution of this singular Winter. There can be little doubt that Pharoah's dream of the fat and lean kine will hold good, in a modified sense, for all ages of time, if we can find a Joseph to interpret the dream, and to foretell the exact year of change. Some of our oldest citizens recall a Winter in New-York, not more than thirty years ago, opening as the present season has begun and so continuing till the equinoctial forces began their work late in February. May we not expect a similar season in the regular rotation of the climatic wheel?

The Ways and Means Committee is not alone in the "demoralization" occasioned by the demand of the people for reduced taxation. The Tribune shares the perplexity. Until the other day, it insisted that the present rate of taxation might be maintained without producing inconvenience or exciting discontent. Now it talks differently. It recommends officials who scoff at retrenchment as a matter of little moment to "inquire of the workingmen, manufacturers and farmers who pay the taxes." The advice is good, and we trust will be heeded by those who, though not adverse to retrenchment, urge the continuance of taxes to pay a debt not yet due. Let them inquire of those "who pay the taxes" what their opinion is on the subject. "Down with the Taxes" will be the response.

We exclude Nova Scotia Coal by the imposition of a heavy tax. But we send to Western Canada more coal than we ever received from Nova Scotia. If the Dominion, following our example, excludes Pennsylvania coal by enacting a Customs' duty, how much will the monopolists gain by the continuance of the Coal tax?

Mr. SCHENCK'S resolution, determining doubts as to the legal duration of the present Income Tax law, may be very well as a means of obviating official difficulties. But the policy which seeks, by straining legal technicalities, to prolong a law whose rate is extravagant, and whose details sadly need revision, is very questionable. We favor the renewal of an income tax, reduced in rate, and rendered equitable in its operation. But that is a different thing from this attempt to benefit the Treasury at the cost of the tax payers by a sort of snap judgment.

Once upon a time a certain journal tried hard to persuade the people that a national debt is a national blessing. It championed the doctrine that a standing public debt is a good thing for investors and not a bad thing for the country. The same journal labors quite as zealously nowadays to prove that a national debt is a national curse—a curse so grievous that op pressive taxation to pay off the debt is vastly preferable. Better impoverish the people, cripple industry and embarrass trade than allow the debt to remain even until it mature—is the doctrine at this moment taught by the oracle. Can the Tribune wonder that the people rely on their own common sense rather than on its unstable financial philosophy?

How high Customs' duties sometimes serve to damage the industry they are supposed to protect, our Washington correspondent this morning explains. The "hide and leather interest" protests that it is "protected" almost unto death. It is so injured by the duty on hides that the export trade of leather to Europe, and of the manufactures of leather to South America, has been lost. The Canadian manufacturers, who have no duty on hides to pay, beat us in the foreign market. For every fifty cents gained by the farmer in the higher price obtained for the hides he has to sell, he pays two or three dollars in the advanced price of boots and shoes, and other forms of manufactured leather.

The ladies of the Suffrage Association seem to be making good headway at Washington. There is an array of influential names about them and their doings, and the "dry bones" of Congress, to speak figuratively, seem to stir, along with the movement. We read of Senators POMEROY, CARPENTER and ROSS as mixed up with it, and also, singularly enough, a Bishop—Bishop SIMPSON. The ladies are to get at the President next; and, as he loves peace, he will, no doubt, be found to say something susceptible of a rather encouraging interpretation. They certainly mean business, and look only to the main point, as they showed when they refused to go out of their way to sympathize with Mrs. BESCHER BROWN, a lady who has been so worried and flouted by the gentlemen critics everywhere, and who will probably consider this action of the strong-minded sisterhood "the most unkindest cut of all."

The Republican leaders in New-Hampshire cannot afford to indulge any longer in their private quarrels. Their majority under the best of circumstances is never large. A change of two or three thousand votes would throw the State into the hands of the Democrats. For fifteen years that party have presented a united front, and each year they have marched to the polls thirty thousand strong. They are watchful for divisions in the ranks of their Republican opponents, and it is time that the latter realized that discord means defeat. This year the Temperance Party enters the field with a candidate of its own for Governor, and we well know from which party his votes will be taken. The Labor Reform Party threatens to do the same thing. The Republicans cannot afford to fritter away their strength in the useless contest as to which clique shall control the party in the State. Let them be wise in time, unite for an energetic canvass, and at the election in March show, by a decisive majority, that the Granite State still enthusiastically supports the Administration of President GRANT. They will inaugurate the elections of the year, and their verdict should be such as to encourage the Republicans of the States which follow them.

Years ago in England, the established Church of Ireland and imprisonment for debt were such pieces of the "Constitution" that to talk of either of them as a thing to be done away with, would have been scouted as simply nonsensical. Both are now gone to the limbo of the Heptarchy and the Constitutions of CLARENDON. That "imprisonment" law had even a stronger hold on the national feeling than the other, for the people believed that incarceration was the great security for the payment of honest debt, and perhaps there may be some who still think the frogues will now run riot in society. But this fear of change, which has usually perplexed the people much more than the monarchs, was always a weak one, and if progress and civilization mean anything—and they do mean something—the human moralities will be found to do as much as the jails—and probably something more.

The strike of ten thousand men at Creusot will add another to the many complications which at present engage the attention of the French Executive. The mines, furnaces, forges and foundries of President SCHNEIDER, which furnish employment to the inhabitants of the little town, constitute one of those vast industrial establishments which are only to be found in the coal and iron-producing districts of Europe, and whose internal disturbances are matters of national importance. A similar stoppage at Seraing in Belgium, about a year ago, threatened at one time to assume the proportions of a domestic insurrection, which was only quelled by the interference of the military, and the sacrifice of not a few lives. Whether in France, Belgium or Germany, the employes at the great iron works are the most turbulent and the worst educated part of the population. Among them may be found representatives of nearly every nationality in Europe, and their leaders are generally men who associate political and socialistic theories with very extreme doctrines regarding the rights of labor. Situated not far from the Swiss frontier, it is probable that in the present case the strikers contain a large element of foreign agitators; and unless speedily arranged, the affair may expand from the dimensions of a mere trade dispute into a difficulty of State.

We are glad to publish the letter on the "line and staff" question, to be found in another column, because its tone is dignified and its spirit honest—thereby differing, we are bound to say, from a good part of the communications which either find their way into print, or are offered as suitable for publication. The line and staff dispute is a fierce and angry one. On one side, the ideas commonly advanced are those which would, if carried out in practice, tear to shreads the whole naval system. On the other, we are too often asked to take opinion for fact, and authority for argument. Our own desire has been to do substantial justice, by such a compromise as would enable officers both of line and staff to live in harmony, and to secure the respect due to them from their men. Our correspondent is in error when he imputes to us any sympathy with disobedience to orders as a means of changing regulations complained of. On the contrary, we distinctly took ground against those breaches of discipline committed by Surgeons some time since, under the impression that they were merely "making test questions." But now that the real question has come before Congress, as to what changes shall be made in the existing regulations, we discuss it from a different point of view. We believe that the complaints of the staff have never till now received due heed; and we look confidently to the Naval Board to substitute for the existing regulations those which, without going to the extremes demanded by some of the staff, shall yet make their positions more respected and desirable, and hence better both for the country and themselves.

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE.

The National Convention at the Capitol—Speakers and Speeches of Yesterday—Final Adjournment.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—The Women's Suffrage Convention reassembled this morning. The hall was crowded. Among those present was Senator WILSON, who, upon being invited to address the Convention, made a short speech, in which he stated that whenever he had a vote to give it would be given to remove any burden from the people, and grant the same rights to women that men possess.

Mrs. STANTON said she was very glad the Senators were taking a position in the front ranks of the Woman's Grand Army of the Republic.

Senator TIPTON was called on to address the Convention, but declined to speak. Mrs. RACHAEL MOORE TOWNSEND, of Philadelphia, Mrs. PAULINE W. DAVIS, of Rhode Island, and other ladies, also spoke, all of whom have heretofore addressed the Convention.

The resolution presented on the first day's meeting in favor of a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, providing for female suffrage, was discussed, and afterwards adopted.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention closed its session this evening. The attendance was quite large. Rev. Mr. MAY made a speech, and afterwards Mrs. CHARLOTTE WILBOUR read an address upon the necessity of woman's elevation, in order to develop her higher and better nature, and the necessity of her acting on her own behalf. Miss ANTHONY gave a glowing account of the success which had attended woman's suffrage in Kansas. Mrs. STANTON spoke of the manner in which individuals were controlled by the Association, and showed that, as the members of the woman's family, our individual action could not be wholly independent. She urged the girls to learn some trade or profession by which they could support themselves, if necessary. In referring to the social evil she reminded the men in high places that the haunts of vice were not filled from the ranks of the poor and lowly, but from the gay and fashionable, where they had not learned to support themselves by any honorable occupation.

DEATH OF GOTTSCHALK.

The steamship South America, which reached this port from Rio de Janeiro last night, brought very sad news. LOUIS MORRAU GOTTSCHALK, who intended to revisit this country in the Fall of the present year, died at Tijuca, near Rio, after a three weeks' illness, on the 18th day of December last. The simple announcement of this fact could not be supplemented at the late hour at which it was received, by any of the events of which a rehearsal will be awaited with painful interest. Few men enjoyed greater popularity, and none more numerous and cordial personal friendships, than the dead pianist. His reputation was world-wide. Born in New-Orleans in 1829, he left the United States in 1841, and for four years studied music in Paris. In 1853 he recrossed the Atlantic, and in February gave his first concert in this City. His subsequent career cannot now have recapitulation. A few weeks ago its latest triumphs were reviewed in a letter from GOTTSCHALK'S own pen, and published in the TIMES. The deceased artist was a littérateur and a linguist as well as a musician, and had contributed to the Atlantic Monthly and to numerous foreign periodicals. A younger brother, and three sisters, well known in musical circles in London, survive him.

EUROPEAN NEWS BY MAIL.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP CITY OF BROOKLYN.

The Inman steamship City of Brooklyn, which left Liverpool Jan. 6 and Queenstown Jan. 7, arrived at this port last evening, with three days' later news than was at hand by the Wesser.

The death of Admiral Sir THOMAS HASTINGS is announced. The deceased officer, who was 80 years of age, entered the navy in 1803.

The Gaulois announces the death of Mme. GALOS, wife of the former Director of the Colonies under LOUIS PHILIPPE, and daughter of General FOY. She has been interred at Père-la-Chaise, in the grand sepulchre, the well-known work of DAVID of Angers, erected in 1825, by national subscription, to the great orator of the Liberal Party.

The Golos, of St. Petersburg, says: "We are informed that the Government had recently under consideration a proposal to authorize all Polish refugees, either during the last revolt or in previous insurrections, to return to their homes. The suggestion, after a serious deliberation, was declared to be inadmissible and illtimed."

The Prussian Government has given orders for the construction of a new ironclad frigate for the North German navy in the naval establishment at Ellerbeck, near Kiel. This frigate is to be called the King Frederick the Great. It is to draw twenty-four feet of water, and be provided with an engine of 800-horse power, like the ironclad the Great Elector, which is now in course of construction. The artillery equipment of the new vessel is to consist of two revolving turrets, with four rifled ten-inch guns, each weighing 440 cwt., and three twenty-four-pounders, each weighing 80 cwt. The Great Elector is now being fitted out at Wilhelmshaven.

The Northeastern Correspondence says: "The treaty of commerce between Austria and England was signed at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Vienna, on the 30th December, by Count DE BEUST and Lord BLOOMFIELD, English Minister. Thus this long negotiation has at length been brought to a successful result, for although the treaty has still to be submitted to the two Parliaments of Vienna and Pesth for approval, that final step is a mere formality, for the Hungarian Chambers have already given their assent, and the conditions required by the Reichsrath before voting the measure have been fulfilled by means of the obliging dispositions of the English Government."

The Government of Stockholm has just published statistical information relative to the treaties of commerce and navigation signed at Paris in 1865 between France and Sweden. Since that time the imports and exports between the two countries have almost doubled. The navigation of Sweden with France has increased since 1864 by 180 per cent., and that of Norway by 69.

The Madrid Politica of Dec. 31 makes the following announcement: "On the arrival last night of General PRIM at Madrid he found a dispatch (not telegraph) awaiting him from Señor MONTEMAR, the Spanish Ambassador to Italy, in which he explains exhaustively the reasons VICTOR EMMANUEL has for not accepting the offering of the Crown of Spain for the Duke of GENOA. The Council of Ministers of Italy have been unanimous on this point. The mother of the young Duke is also opposed to the heavy charge of ruling a people so agitated as the Spaniards being laid on his weak shoulders. In these circumstances what other could a constitutional King decide? What more could Señor MONTEMAR do, who has worked this point with a perseverance and an ability worthy of a better cause? Such are in substance the contents of the dispatch of Señor MONTEMAR, and it is an amplification of the late telegrams received by the Minister of State."

A young man named GARDNER FULLER, who described himself as an American, but could not produce any proof of the fact, was tried, says Galignani's Messenger, Jan. 5, at the Tribunal of Correctional Police on numerous charges of obtaining goods under false pretences. He appears to have arrived in Paris, almost without resources, six months back, and after a brief stay at the Grand Hotel, which terminated on the presentation of his bill, he hired a warehouse in the Rue d'Enghein, and commenced business as a commission agent, his principal capital at the moment being the plate on his door bearing the names of GARDNER FULLER & Co. He then procured goods from different manufacturers, among other articles be ng twenty velocipedes, sold to him for 200 francs each, and which he immediately disposed of at half price. His business operations spread over a very wide field, and extended to every branch of trade in which he could get credit; his victims including a wine-grower in the Moselle, a cordial maker in Berry, a dealer in comestibles in Paris, and a boot manufacturer at Lyons. When his creditors became clamorous, he decamped, but was soon captured. The Court sentenced him to thirteen months' imprisonment.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Question of Emigration and of Surplus Labor—Public Meeting at Exeter Hall, in London.

On the evening of Jan. 4 a crowded meeting, marked in its course by exciting incidents, was held at Exeter Hall, in London, to consider the emigration question, in connection with the large amount of surplus labor in Great Britain. Sir GEORGE GREY, K. C. B., presided, and with him on the platform were Sir James Lawrence, M. P.; Major-General Sir W. Denison, K. C. B; Mr. W. McCullagh Torrens, M. P.; Mr. McArthur, M. P.; General Wittington, Hon. Auberon Herbert, Mr. Frederick Young, Captain Bedford Pim, the Count de G. Lancourt, Hon. F. S. Lidstone, (of Canada;) Mr. James Youl, Mr. George Potter, Mr. D. Chinery, Mr. Edmond Beales, B. A.; Captain Goodliffe, &c., and other gentlemen well known in connection with social questions.

The Chairman, who was received with loud cheers, said the question which they were met to discuss was a very great one, taken from whatever point of view. It was manifest that a vast and unusual amount of distress prevailed in this country, and that that distress was of the character which was the most crushing portions of the population which in former times were but in a trifling degree touched by it. It was not only the poorest classes, but the classes above them as well, which were becoming involved all together in a common calamity. Under such circumstances, it was believed that one mode by which relief could be applied to that distress was emigration. [Cries of "No!"] Those who were in favor of emigration did not hold that it was the only remedy to apply as a permanent cure to evils in this country, but they considered it would apply as an instantaneous remedy, and one which would allow public attention to be turned to other methods to give permanent and lasting relief to our distress. It was with the greatest satisfaction that he and others had seen the workingmen of Great Britain themselves taking a prominent position in this matter, for the working class had addressed a petition to the Queen on the subject, to which, up to the present time, 104,000 authenticated signatures had been attached. He saw great advantages resulting to the working classes if they met throughout the country in proper rooms to discuss the points of emigration, for they would then become acquainted with some idea of the great Empire connected with this country. All who intended to leave this country for another part of the Empire should make up their minds not to leave this country as persons "helped out" by the hand of charity, but it was in every respect desirable that they should help themselves to enter with confidence upon their new home, both as respects the present and future, for in the future their children and children's children would feel no shame as to the manner in which their father "came out." If emigration were conducted by charitable gentlemen without the voice of the workingmen, it would be felt that emigration was a mere matter of charity; but it would be different if a man could be placed in the position of paying hereafter that which he could not now afford to pay down. He was, therefore, desirous that the workingmen themselves should take part in the management of these proposed societies for emigration, for he believed the great colonies had been raised into their greatness by workingmen from this country. Workingmen and their descendants held prominent positions in the colonies, and emigrants from England would be well received by the Colonial Governments, and he was enabled to say with confidence, from an experience of thirty-three years, arising from the smallest possible beginning, that every man who deserved to succeed would in the colonies be sure of success. A man with industry would there not only be above the want of clothing, food and shelter, but he would also be able to leave to his family a sufficient property upon which the fortunes of that family might be built. He felt no hesitation in asking friends of the working classes who were able to face hopefully this matter of emigration to enter upon it, and they were asked to go to no new country and to no foreign land. They would, by going hence, make room for others poorer than themselves in the walks of industry here, and they would become in no slight degree the best friends of their countrymen by creating a demand abroad for goods manufactured here. He reminded them that this was a nation whose language was being adopted over the habitable globe as the most convenient for intercourse; whose form of religion was adopted as that of the purest and best form of Christianity; whose literature was accepted as the literature of mankind; whose laws were such that human kind loved to dwell under. ["No!" and "How about Ireland?"] There could be no question that our laws were respected and copied, as was proved by the fact that the United States laws were founded upon the English laws, as well as the laws of the various Colonial Governments, and the Anglo-Saxon race everywhere adopted these laws. It was, moreover, a fact that whenever the people of other nations entered our colonies, they in a short period of time could not be distinguished from the British nation.

Sir JAS. LAWRENCE, who was warmly cheered on coming forward, said it was his privilege to move the first resolution: "That the present depressed state of trade throughout the country necessitates the removal of part of its population to such colonies as may afford them a better prospect of earning a livelihood by labor." [Cry of "No," and responsive cries of "Yes," and cheers.] The motion carried with it its own argument, because no man could attempt to deny that if there were more people willing to work than work could be found for, their best policy—indeed, their only policy—would be to go where the work was to be had. He then proceeded to comment upon a paragraph in the Times relative to the Emigration Commissioners' returns on the emigration of last year, and he denied that the facts bore out the statements made in those returns with regard to the great amount of emigration from the United Kingdom, for he declared the numbers of foreigners from other nations, who had embarked here, were added to our native emigrants so obtain these results. He declared that there had been less emigration during the last ten years up to 1868 than there was in the previous ten years up to 1858, so that there was no need for the alarm as to an exodus from the United Kingdom. Sir W. DENISON supported the resolution, which was also supported by Hon. AUBERON HERBERT, in a speech which was loudly cheered, and who called for this great Empire to be welded into one with intercommunication and conjoint interests.

A most extraordinary scene was then presented. The Chairman was about to put the motion to the meeting, when some persons with Irish names, and having an American-Irish appearance, some of whom had been uttering adverse cries during the speeches, demanded the right of moving an amendment. Some few at the end strove to turn the meeting in their favor, and they were allowed sufficient time to make known that the purport of their ideas to condemn emigration as being "wrong in principle," and that the Land laws should be altered, and this much having been stated the whole meeting refused, even on the solicitation of the Chairman and others, to hear the men. A cry was raised that they were Fenians, and as they persisted in disturbing the meeting, the Police were called in amid a great uproar. At length the Chairman put the original resolution to the meeting, and it was carried almost unanimously. The malcontents then left the platform in a body upon so overwhelming a proof of their unpopularity.

Mr. M'CULLAGH TORRENS, M. P., then moved the following resolution:

"That this meeting approves the objects of the Emigration League (combining the National Aid and the Workingmen's Emigration Societies) to urge, by various agencies, upon the Home Government the initiation of a national emigration policy in cooperation with the Governments of the colonies; to promote emigration from those districts of the metropolis and of the provinces where distress abounds through the want of employment; to assist persons and families desirous of emigrating with advances towards their passage and outfit; to afford advice and information to intending emigrants and others; to make arrangements for their passage and for their proper reception upon their arrival in the colonies."

Mr. MARKHAM LATHAM seconded the motion, which was spoken to by Mr. GUILE, and carried unanimously.

Mr. MCARTHUR proposed—

"That a deputation be appointed by this meeting to wait upon the Prime Minister, and urge upon him the necessity of the Government assisting the League to carry out emigration to our colonies upon a large scale."

This was spoken to by several trades' unionist leaders and others, and having passed, the proceedings closed at a very late hour.

The Colonies and the Home Government.

On Jan. 6, the colonists and gentlemen interested in the British dependencies again met at Cannon-street, and the result of their deliberations was to agree upon a settled course of action in the adoption of the resolutions which were put forward at the last meeting by Mr. BEAUMONT.

The chair was occupied by Mr. YOULE, who, on opening the proceedings, said it must be most satisfactory to all those who had set themselves the task of drawing the attention of the English public to the colonial questions which were now ripening, to see that their efforts had not been in vain. Mr. FROUDE, in Fraser's Magazine, had taken up this question in a manner which, to all who desired to see the colonies continue a part of this Empire, must be highly gratifying. He then called upon Mr. BEAUMONT to move his resolutions.

Mr. BEAUMONT, in the course of a very long speech, pointed out that these meetings had continued for several weeks without doing more than carrying resolutions which left the meeting just where they were before, and without defining what should be the plan of action for the future. Seeing that this would be the case with the other resolutions of which notices had been given, he had brought forward a series to supersede those presented by Mr. WESTGARTH, and his resolutions laid down the principles by which the colonists should hold, and he should point out the way towards the assemblage being something more than the "Cannon-street meeting." He moved as his first resolution the opinion—

"That, as British subjects in the colonies, no less than those in the mother country, are bound to render, and do willingly render, allegiance to the Crown of England, they are no less entitled to the constitutional rights of British subjects; and that to withhold from them any of such rights which are applicable to their situation would be a grave offence on the part of any responsible officer of the Crown."

With regard to this declaration he said it was taking a perfectly legal position, for the duty of allegiance was incumbent upon the subject wherever he was, and the duty of protection devolved upon the Crown. He did not mean by this that the colonies should embroil themselves in trouble and entail great cost upon this country for the protection this country was bound to give was reasonable protection, and the protection of its name. He pointed out that by action taken at different periods of English history—namely, in the time of EDWARD III., in relation to the treaty of Northampton, concerning the Scotch war in the time of JAMES II., and in the time when peace was made with America, it was declared that no part of the British Dominions could be alienated without the sanction of Parliament. Therefore, no Secretary of State could alienate any colony, and the inhabitants of those colonies remained British citizens, owing allegiance to the Crown, which, on its part, was bound to give them protection. His next resolution dealt with the emigration question, and he submitted—

"That it is of the highest importance to the whole Empire and to the colonies to encourage emigration from the mother country to her colonies, and for this purpose to make much more largely available than hitherto the almost unbounded resources of Great Britain and those colonies."

The great value of the colonies to the nation was, that it presented new fields of enterprise to the inhabitants of these islands. These overcrowded countries looked to that point, and to leave out the question of emigration from any general considerations of colonial matters would be almost equal to leaving out the character of Hamlet from the tragedy of "Hamlet." This resolution pointed out to the people of this country that if they were overcrowded here they could go to another part of this Empire and plant a new England, under the same laws and giving themselves the same rights which they held here. That would prevent our people going to foreign lands, which might and which might not in future times be friends with this country. The advantage of this continued citizenship, both to the State and to the emigrant, should not be lost sight of, and it had been lost sight of to some extent in the minds of certain classes of politicians for the sake of certain political conveniences. He held that the Government should give its dependencies assistance in the time of their trouble, as a parent would snatch his child from off the fire, and leave the question of cost and taxes apart for quiet consideration, as the father would leave the question as to how the child got in danger until it was off the fire. But there was a party in the State whose endeavor it was to sever the colonies from the mother country, and British Columbia was an instance of this, for, worn out with the cold treatment of our Colonial Office, it was proposed in that colony to seek the protection and assistance, if needed, from the United States. Englishmen should do all they possibly could to stop this disintegration of the Empire. He then proposed the following resolutions as calculated, with the others, to meet the exigencies of the time:

"That the separation of the colonies from the mother country would be a capital injury to the British Empire, and ought not to be contemplated otherwise than as a remote contingency to be prevented by every legitimate means of policy and statesmanship." "That, in order to guard against any such contingency, and to consolidate and perpetuate the essential relations between her colonies and Great Britain, it is of urgent importance that the relative rights and obligations of the Imperial and the colonial Governments be adequately ascertained and defined, with due regard to the just claims of the mother country and of the colonies, and also that the mutual relations of such Governments be adjusted so as to secure to the colonies the utmost independence consistent with their various positions, and at the same time to maintain the integrity and to develop for the common good the resources and power of the British Empire." "That, to this end, it is desirable that the condition and administration of the colonies be made the subject of solemn investigation and deliberation on the part of the Government, acting with the advice of Parliament, and that, whether it be conducted by Parliamentary Committee or by Royal Commission, the fullest opportunity ought to be insured to the colonists and their representatives of cooperating in and being heard upon such inquiry, and also with regard to the measures which may be adopted in pursuance thereof, in order that they may be as satisfactory as possible to the requirements and feelings of the colonies. That, as there is reason to fear that the policy of the Government is unfavorable to the maintenance and consolidation of the colonies as integral parts of the British Empire, it is desirable that public opinion and action be evoked upon this momentous subject by holding public meetings, and otherwise as occasion may serve."

Subsequently these resolutions were carried unanimously, and it was also agreed that the National and Colonial League should be formed upon the basis of those resolutions. The Committee, with power to add to the number, was nominated. Among the members were Sir George Grey, Mr. Edward Wilson, Mr. Youl, Mr. Beagment, Mr. Westgarth, Mr. Sewell, and other gentlemen who have taken a prominent part in these meetings were nominated.

The proceedings then closed with a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

IMPERIAL FRANCE.

"What is Promised in 1870."

The Siècle, under the heading of "What is Promised in 1870," publishes the subjoined observations: "The present year will have to reform not only the law on the Press, but also that on elections. At the moment when official candidatures are said to have passed away, a Minister presents himself to the electors of the Lot-et-Garonne, in a circumscription where the Government candidate was in the habit of triumphing. Should we not get rid at once of all arbitrary circumscriptions and transmissions of legislative seats? Should we not also make the number of Deputies commensurate with that of the electors? The year 1870, if it only practices the constitution with a little sincerity, ought to give to Paris the fourteen or fifteen deputies to which the capital has a right, and also to elect its own municipal councillors. The administrators of the commune of Paris should not be nominated by the deputies of departmental circumscriptions. The year 1870, according to the programmes of the elected of 1869, ought also to deliver us from article 75, and restore to functionaries as to all other citizens, that personal responsibility which is the only pledge of a sound administration. We take notice also of the savings promised us in the budget. But what we require is not merely a few trifling economics, but a severe revision of our financial laws and a more prudent distribution of the national resources, allotting more millions to useful undertakings and fewer to those of a fruitless character. The same year also, we are told, is to promulgate for us a sound municipal law, giving to the commune all facilities for doing good, transporting the real authority into the municipal council itself, and assigning to the Mayor, its delegate, his true rôle—that of the executive power. Moreover, 1870 is to furnish us with a real legislation on gratuitous and obligatory instruction, and that perhaps is the most essential point of all."

How Ex-Finance Minister Magne was Ousted from Office.

The Paris correspondent of the London Daily News, by publishing the subjoined letters, explains the manner in which Ex-Finance Minister MAGNE was relieved of his portfolio. "The accompanying correspondence," he says, "between the ex-Minister of Finance and the new Prime Minister is authentic; and, though evidently they have exchanged other communications not publicly known, these letters throw considerable light on the situation:

M. MAGNE TO M. EMILE OLLIVIER.

JAN. 1, 1870.

MON CHER MONSIEUR OLLIVIER: I am greatly touched by your amiable letter, and thank you for it. The foundation of the Liberal Empire is wished for by the country. I have worked to achieve it with conviction and devotion. I am still disposed heartily to cooperate in the object. But it is an arduous work, and the capital point is success. Nothing should be neglected to bring all the influences into play. Now, I have been told that conferences were held yesterday between leaders of the Right Centre and Left Centre, and that arrangements might be facilitated, if a larger number of portfolios were to be distributed to new men, and more particularly if the finance portfolio were at your disposition. Consider well what you will do before anything is definitely settled. Personal matters are quite secondary. The least sacrifice for me to the common cause would be to leave the field clear. Whether far off or near, I shall always be found among the most zealous and most trustful partisans. Votre tout devoué,

MAGNE.

The above letter was, no doubt, indited for publicity. With all respect to M. MAGNE, I do not at all believe that he expected to manœuvre himself out of office. M. OLIVIER, however, took him at his word, and appointed M. BUFFET Finance Minister.

On New Year's Day M. MAGNE wrote the following letter to M. SCHNEIDER, President of the Corps Legislatif:

MY DEAR FRIEND: OLLIVIER has talked with these gentlemen (ces messieurs.) They want all the portfolios for themselves, with the exception of those of the two military—War and Marine. He has written to ask what I propose to do. Naturally I replied that he must give way to them. In withdrawing from the combination, I congratulate myself on having insisted that the situation should be made clear and decided. I would rather be out of office than an intelligible situation than remain in office with a misunderstanding, and after equivocal negotiations. A thousand friendships. P. MAGNE.

To everybody who knows French the expression "Ces Messieurs" must make it evident that M. MAGNE wrote to M. SCHNEIDER under impulses the reverse of friendly to M. OLLIVIER'S new colleagues. He never meant to go out of office, and has been jockied out of it, although the logic of the situation, which forcibly struck him, pointed to a result which escaped his penetration.

RUSSIA.

Reported Discovery of a Conspiracy Against the Emperor's Life.

From le Phare de la Loire.

Letters from St. Petersburg state that a vast conspiracy has been discovered against the life of the Czar. The centre of action of the conspirators was the City of Odessa. The pupils of the University Papioh and Yeremichew are principally inculpated. In order to carry out their object the conspirators had resolved to tear up the rails of the line during the journey of the Emperor from Odessa to St. Petersburg; but the rigorous surveillance exercised over the whole line the Czar was to use prevented them from executing their project. The Police did not even suspect that the rails had been removed by such dangerous conspirators. This offence was attributed to the peasants of the neighborhood, who, when in want of iron, have recourse to robbery in order to obtain it. The most rigorous surveillance is powerless to repress this kind of theft, and this deplorable cupidity of the ignorant peasants exposes the lives of the travelers who take the line from Baltic to Odessa to grave danger. The conspirators arrested belong with-out exception to the Russian nationality. A large number of books, pamphlets and revolutionary proclamations emanating from Russian printing offices abroad, were found in their possession. The Russians are much astonished that no Pole was affiliated to the conspiracy, although the Polish nationality is represented by a large number of young men at the University of Odessa. The Police have also discovered a conspiracy at St. Petersburg. Several young men are accused of having disseminated revolutionary proclamations. It appears, however, that this second conspiracy is a mere childish affair, and these young people mixed up in it will be tried in public. Lists of proscriptions, upon which figures, among others, M. KATKOFF, the famous editor of the Moscow Gazette, have also been discovered. The Government of the Czar is anxious to ascertain whether these plots were fomented by the Russian exiles in Switzerland. The conspiracy, ramifications of which were discovered at Moscow and St. Petersburg, has nothing in common with the Odessa plot.

AMUSEMENTS.

The Season at the Olympic.

As we anticipated, Mr. G. L. FOX'S performances in "Paul Pry" and in "Robert Macaire" have attracted immense audiences to the Olympic Theatre. We now learn that in a few nights that excellent comedian will act Aminidab Sleek, in "The Serious Family," and dapper Captain Shortcut in "The Spitfire." After these pieces shall have had their run, Mr. FOX will represent Hamlet in a fresh tragedy by an American author. The new pantomime will be produced subsequently.

Miscellaneous Notes.

Out of considerations that seem to us altogether judicious, the ball which had been contemplated for Jan. 25, in aid of the American Dramatic Fund, is postponed....Miss KATE FIELD is to lecture at Irving Hall, on Saturday, the 22d, her subject being "Among the Adirondacks." The entertainment is offered under the auspices of "Post Phil Kearney," No. 8, and the proceeds are to be given to the Fund for the Relief of Disabled Soldiers and Sailors....Mlle CLARA F. NORRIS, who read with success at the Union League Theatre, on Wednesday, repeats her performance at the same house to-night....The Amateur Concert to have been given by Mme. ADELE VARONA and other ladies, in aid of suffering Cuban families, occurs (after postponement) Saturday....The Arion Society sing "Der Freischutz" at the Academy of Music to-night.

WESTCHESTER TAXATION.

The Troubles of the Town of West Farms—Plain Statement of the Situation—Memorial Sent to the Legislature.

There is, as the TIMES readers are aware, a difficulty existing in Westchester County as to the collection of taxes in that section, and the Courts have been invoked to decide as to the legality of the questions in dispute. So far as we are able to ascertain, the condition of affairs is simply this: The town of West Farms, in addition to its other taxes, has to provide for raising this year the sum of $87,150 for the opening and laying out of Madison-avenue, and $26,050 for the opening and laying out of Berrien-avenue, both of which thoroughfares run through the town, one on the east and the other on the west of Central-avenue. Both were opened by order of the Legislature, in accordance with acts passed in 1868 and 1869. By the provisions of these acts the Board of Town Auditors, composed of the Supervisor, the Town Clerk and four Justices of the Peace are required to take measures to assess the pro rata tax on the property holders for these improvements. Accordingly they met not long ago to make up the tax rolls, taking into consideration among other expenses to be liquidated the amounts of $87,150 and $26,050, above alluded to. The average tax upon each property holder, including his proportion for the two avenue improvements, is $6 58 on each $1,000 worth of real estate. Excluding the proportionate tax for these, however, it would be $5 08 on every $1,000 worth of property. The objection is now raised by a party, of which Hon. JOHN B. HASKIN is the acknowledged leader, that the avenue assessments ought not to be collected this year, as the taxes are already somewhat onerous. It is contended also by Mr. HASKIN and his friends that the new avenues are not necessary, and that, at all events, before the assessments are laid therefor, the Town Auditors should have called a general meeting of the citizens, and that the amount to be raised in payment for the improvements should be determined in such town meeting. The Supervisors, on the other hand, claim that they are not vested with discretionary power in the premises at all; that they are simply inferior officers, bound to carry out the provisions of the enactments of the Legislature, their superior; that the special laws in question determine minutely their duty to be simply to make provision for levying the tax according to the sum declared by the Commissioners for the improvement to be necessary for liquidating the expenses of the work; that they have no power, under the law, to alter the tax rolls, when they have once been confirmed; and, therefore, that they cannot remit the collection of the tax to any future year. Mr. HASKIN, on behalf of the dissentients, sued out an injunction before Hon. Judge TAPPAN, of the Supreme Court, who is reported to be his law partner, and who is also a taxpayer of the town of West Farms, restraining the Receiver of Taxes from collecting the sum levied for the improvements in question—$55,206. Argument in relation to dissolving this injunction was heard by Judge TAPPAN, a few days since, and a decision with regard to it will be made at an early day. The majority of the taxpayers of West Farms side with the town authorities, and object to Mr. HASKIN'S course in having brought the issue before a Judge who is one of the parties interested, and with whom he holds such peculiarly confidential relations. In order to prevent the occurrence of any similar difficulty in future, the town authorities yesterday transmitted to the Assemblymen and the Senator from Westchester a memorial, of which the following is a copy:

WEST FARMS, Jan. 10, 1870.

We, the undersigned, members of the Board of Town Officers of the town of West Farms, respectfully request that you will permit no bill pending for the laying out of new roads in said town to pass the Assembly without first mailing a copy of said bill to the Supervisor of this town, that it may receive proper consideration. Very respectfully,

FRED. GROTE, Supervisor.
FERDINAND MEYER, Town Clerk.
S. M. PURDY, Justice of the Peace.
W. G. LENT, Justice of the Peace.
D. R. SHIELS, Justice of the Peace.

The One Cent Ferriage to Brooklyn Question—How Stock is Duplicated.

Mr. CYRUS P. SMITH adheres to the idea that the Union Ferry Company is a popular benevolent institution, and as he is Managing Director of the Company, a good deal of importance attaches to his expression of opinion on the subject. He gives the following figures for 1869:

Total receipts from five ferries	$954,000
Total expenses, including 10 per cent. dividend	928,000
Profits for the year	$26,000

Notwithstanding this exhibit, it is utterly impossible to obtain a single share, or any number of shares, of the Union Ferry stock. Every stockholder claims to be abundantly satisfied with the return they get for their investment. One such has ventilated the fact that without solicitation on his part, his stock was doubled—"watered," so that he received a double dividend upon his original stock instead of the nominal dividend as set forth in the balance sheet of the Company. Thus, Ferry stockholders appear not only to have received two percentages, but to have been blessed, by good management, with a voluntary increase of their stock, the capital and interest having been paid by the people crossing the river, at from one and a half to two cents per head. Mr. SMITH says $1,000,000 would pay for the Company's property, which consists of seventeen boats, the ferry houses, the racks and slips; that any person can have them by paying for them, and run the ferries at one cent, but the Union Company cannot and will not; and that is to be the purport of their answer to Mayor HALL.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

The proposed sale of leases of Trinity School lots at the Exchange yesterday by A. J. BLEECKER, SON & Co., was not successful. Leases for three terms of twenty-one years each were offered at a fixed rental, bids being asked for a bonus on each lot. The rents were fixed as follows: One lot southwest corner of Seventy-ninth-street and First-avenue, $350; sixteen lots on Seventy-ninth-street, $250 each; northwest corner of Eighteenth-street and First-avenue, $300; two lots on the avenue, adjoining this last, $225 each; twenty-three lots on Eighteenth-street, $175 each; northeast corner of Eighteenth-street and First-avenue, $300; the lot adjoining the last, $225. After spending nearly an hour in endeavoring to obtain bids for these leases, Mr. BLEECKER abandoned the sale, having disposed of only five lots, viz., the northwest corner of Eighteenth-street and First-avenue, at a bonus of $25, and three lots on Seventy-ninth-street, at a bonus of $5 each.

A single Fifth-avenue lot, above Eighteenth-street, was sold by E. A. LAWRENCE, under the direction of the Supreme Court, and brought $18,000. It was stated that the same lot sold one year ago for $19,000.

7 PER CENT. GOLD BONDS AT 95

FREE OF GOVERNMENT TAX,

ISSUED BY THE

Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railroad Company,

FIRST MORTGAGE AND CONVERTIBLE,

AND PROTECTED BY A

LIBERAL SINKING FUND.

INTEREST PAYABLE IN COIN AT NEW-YORK OR LONDON. PRINCIPAL PAYABLE IN COIN IN FIFTY YEARS.

TRUSTEES:

J. EDGAR THOMSON, President Pennsylvania Railroad Company.
CHAS. L. FROST, President Toledo, Peoria and Warsaw Railroad Company.

These bonds, at present price of gold, yield over nine per cent. interest, and as an investment they are fully as secure as United States Five-twenties, which now pay only six per cent. in currency.

They are only issued upon each section of the road as fast as the same is completed and in successful operation. Over $2,000,000 have been expended on the road. Eighty-three miles are about completed and equipped, and already show large earnings; and the remainder of the line is rapidly progressing towards completion.

The State of Iowa, through which this road runs, is one of the richest agricultural sections in America. Its large population, extending with surprising rapidity, and its immense yield of grain, pork, wool and other agricultural products, create a growing demand for the construction of this road, which affords the best possible guarantee for the bondholders, especially as the line runs through the wealthiest and most thickly populated sections of the State.

The road also runs through the rich and growing State of Minnesota. Reference to the map of the United States will show that it traverses the most enterprising and growing portion of the West, and forms one of the great trunk lines in direct communication with New-York, Chicago and St. Louis, being to the latter city 90 miles nearer from Northern Iowa and all portions of the State of Minnesota than by any other road now built or projected, and also the nearest route from Central and Southern Iowa.

The road is opened for local traffic as rapidly as constructed, and thus RECEIVES EARNINGS ON ITS COMPLETED SECTIONS GREATLY IN EXCESS OF THE AMOUNT NEEDED TO PAY THE INTEREST UPON ITS BONDS BEFORE THE ROAD IS FINISHED. The payment of these bonds is therefore guaranteed, by a great business already in existence on the route of the road, as well as by new current earnings, and has not to risk any of the contingencies which always attend the opening of roads in a new and unsettled country.

A limited quantity only of these Bonds are now offered at 95 and accrued interest.

After a thorough investigation of the above enterprise, we recommend these Bonds as a first-class investment, affording absolute safety, and paying an unusually liberal rate of interest. All marketable securities at their full price, free of commission and express charges, received in payment. Pamphlets and maps furnished on application.

FINANCIAL.

THE

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS

OF THE

Chicago, Danville and Vincennes RAILROAD.

Total amount to be issued	$5,000,000
Estimated Cost of Road (140 miles)	4,500,000
Estimated Earnings per annum	2,630,000
Net Earnings per annum	879,000
Interest on the Loan per annum	175,000
Amount of Bonds per mile of Road,	18,000
Amount of Stock per mile	18,000
Amount of Net Earnings per mile	6,300

The Bonds follow the completion of the Road—have the Union Trust Company of New-York as their Official Register and Transfer Agent—and are sold at present at 95 and accrued interest.

They bear examination and comparison better, it is believed, than any other now before the public, in the fixed and unchangeable elements of Safety, Security, and Profit.

They bear good interest—Seven per cent. Gold for forty years—and are secured by a Sinking Fund, and First Mortgage upon the road, its outfit, and net income, the Franchises, and all present and future acquired property of the Company.

They depend upon no new or half-settled territory for business to pay their interest, but upon an old, well-settled, and productive country;—assuming that a railroad built through the heart of such a region offers better security for both Interest and Principal than a road to be built through the most highly-extolled wilderness or sparsely-settled territory.

This Railroad possesses special advantages, in running into and out of the City of Chicago, an important Railroad and Commercial Centre; in running through a line of villages and old farming settlements in the richest portion of the State of Illinois; in running near to deposits of Iron Ore of great extent and value, and over broad fields of the best coal in the State—which mining interests are its monopoly. And besides the local and other business thus assured, there will be attracted to this road the considerable traffic already springing up "From the Lakes to the Gulf;" as with its Southern Connections it forms a Trunk Line 45 miles shorter than any other route from Chicago to Nashville.

These Bonds are therefore based upon a Realty and a Business that a few years must inevitably double—and competent judges say treble—in value.

Governments selling while the price is high, pay well if put into these Bonds, and Trust or Estate Funds can be put into NOTHING BETTER.

Pamphlets, with Maps, &c., on hand for distribution.

Peace at Last—Retirement of the Allied Forces from Paraguay—Return of Count D'Eu and Paranhos—Lopez in Treaty With Indians—Skirmishes at Guasu, Jejuim and Yguatime.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BUENOS AYRES, Saturday, Jan. 15, 1870.

There seems to be, at least, an appearance of peace, so far as the power of LOPEZ is concerned. The Argentine troops are daily expected in Buenos Ayres, where preparations are being made to receive them with rockets, music, balls and similar rejoicings. The Oriental Republic's forces are also on their way back, though out of the 5,000 which left at various times for Paraguay probably not over as many hundred will return, and the Brasilian troops will shortly leave, at least the greater number; a few ironclads being left in the river, and a small force in Asuncion will probably constitute all the forces left. General OSORIO has already left headquarters; the Count D'EU, and Minister PARANHOS, are under marching orders, though the two latter are expected to stay a short time in this city before leaving for Rio Janeiro.

According to the report of a deserter from LOPEZ it is stated that he, LOPEZ, made a treaty with the Caiguay Indians, before leaving San Estanislao for Curuguaty, by which they agreed to furnish him with 15,000 men and provisions. This report seems false, and though LOPEZ may obtain certain aid from some of the savage tribes, and by this means be enabled to carry on a guerilla warfare for months, still there does not appear to be the ghost of a chance of his being ever able to regain what he has lost, since last accounts state he has been driven almost, if not entirely off Paraguayan soil, accompanied by his faithful Generals CARALLERO and RESQUIN and also by about 1,000 men, to the other side of the River Maracarr. The active movements of the past fortnight are few, yet they demonstrate how completely LOPEZ has been annihilated. On the 15th ult. Colonel MELLO attacked and defeated a force of about 200 men under Major FRANCO at the Arroyo Guasu, (Guazo?) capturing, about fifty horses, and rescuing several families. This, taken in conjunction with an official dispatch of the Count D'EU, dated the 29th ult., giving accounts of further movements, appears to indicate that LOPEZ cannot have any large number of troops. From this dispatch it appears that after the enemy's defeat at Zejui-Guazo, the Eleventh Battalion followed his forces to the River Zejuinie, over which there was a bridge; crossing this, the enemy partly destroyed it and proceeded to intrench themselves on the opposite side, though closely pursued by Colonel FIDELIS, who drove the Paraguayans further back to Ignatuise. Two miles further on, at Stamare, machines for manufacturing gunpowder were discovered and destroyed. In this expedition several hundred families were rescued, and Colonel FIDELIS reported sounds of artillery to have been heard, they leading to the supposition that General CAMARA'S force had also attacked the enemy further north, with what result is not yet known; but as CAMARA is advancing, or at least ought to be, by way of Concepcion, this may be true. Deserters state LOPEZ to be living as a common soldier, enduring his due share of hardship and misery with the rest; all his troops are half starved, their rations being one ox to 200 men. The few men he has, as also LOPEZ himself, are said to be suffering greatly from the innumerable insects which abound in the Sierras.

A rather unfortunate "row" has taken place between the Provisional Government, at Asuncion, and the Italian Council. The facts are these: The Consul being accused of appropriating certain moneys, jewels, &c., placed under his charge by Italian subjects while LOPEZ was in power at Asuncion, thought his wisest course would be to leave. With this intent he took refuge on board the Italian gunboat Ardita, and while there endeavored to ship some half a dozen boxes on a river steamer carrying the Italian flag. The Port Captain seized several while in the act of shipment; but while attempting the seizure of two more his boat was attacked by an armed crew from the Ardita and driven off. An order was then issued prohibiting the sailing of the Venesa, but it sailed nevertheless—the protest sent by the Provisional Government to the Ardita's commander being returned unopened. An "indignation meeting" was held by the "Triumvate" at once, and thus the matter stands. Commercial news is unchanged, prices tending upwards; wool and produce sustaining themselves at same prices. Lumber is just now not wanted, the supply being enough to cram all the yards in the city, and several more vessels are expected.

PICKUNE.

THE TORNADO IN KENTUCKY.

Vivid Description of the Terrible Scenes at Cave City—Houses Blown Away like Wisps of Straw—Eleven Persons Killed and Many Wounded.

Correspondence of the Cincinnati Gazette.

CAVE CITY, Ky., Tuesday, Jan. 18, 1870.

Full particulars of the doings of the tornado which cut off and demolished nearly one-third of this little town, yesterday morning, will never be known. The storm had a beginning and an end, and the end was not more than two minutes later than the beginning; but a description of the scene during those two minutes, or of the sad havoc which was the result of the storm, can have no beginning, and can never be made complete.

Professor A. T. WILLIAMS, one of the sufferers, says that he was awakened about 5 o'clock by the heavy fall of hail which beat against and demolished the windows of his house. The hail shower continued but a moment, and immediately upon the cessation of the hail storm there was a long, continuous sheet of flame making powerful light, which continued but another moment. He then heard the approaching wind storm and anticipated the danger, but thought his house, which was strongly built, would withstand the storm, but he prepared himself for the worst results. His wife, having become alarmed, made an effort to get out of the house, but Professor WILLIAMS caught her and threw her upon the bed and prevented her from going out. The house stood the first attack bravely, but it was afterwards picked up by the storm, lifted from its foundations and turned completely round in the air two or three times before being parted asunder and demolished. There were unmistakable evidences of this fact, besides the impressions of Professor WILLIAMS and other inmates of the house. Several persons were sleeping in the house at the time. Those who were sleeping in the back part of the house were found in front of where the house stood. Professor WILLIAMS had deposited his clothing on a chair in his bedroom on retiring. His pants were found hanging upon a stake half a mile west of the site of the house; his coat was found three-fourths of a mile in an eastward direction, and the vest was found nearly two miles west of the house.

Mr. WILLIAMS and wife were separated and covered with débris, be insensible, and both of them hurt, but not badly. He regained consciousness soon, and began to collect the scattered fragments of his family, and found that none were in immediate danger. The most terrific rain storm immediately followed the wind and lightning. No words can portray an idea of the scene. Those who had witnessed the most terrifying battle scenes say they never saw or heard, or felt, or conceived of anything so perfectly hideous and terrifying as the howling of the winds, the vivid flashes of lightning, the crashing of houses, the drenching rain, the heartrending shrieks and piteous wailings of the terrified and the wounded, the whole of which occurred in two minutes, or probably less time. The wind shrieked, screamed, howled and roared. By the occasional flashes of lightning, it could be seen that the air was filled with flying trees, timber, houses, fragments of houses, stables, and buildings of all kinds, furniture, stoves and cooking utensils, clothing of bedding, animals, fowls and every conceivable thing, animate and inanimate, that came within the range of the storm. If the fiend had a form, it was that of a heavy, angry cloud, which swept the earth and tore everything it touched from its fixed place. The crash was quick and terrific, but the noise of the breaking houses was music compared with the bellowing winds that preceded it. The destruction was complete. About fifty houses were demolished, and there is not to be found a portion of a building, a piece of furniture, an article of jewelry, and article of clothing or bedding, a book or a piece of ware of any kind that is worth the sum of fifty cents. The remains of the houses may serve for firewood, the fragments of furniture for kindling, the clothing and bedding for old rags; but there is nothing left which has the track of a hair mile in width, and extending at least twelve or fifteen miles in length, except in two or three singular instances, that is worth a farthing, or ever will be, in the way it was originally designed. Professor WILLIAMS had a large library, worth thousands of dollars, of which not a single book had been found that can ever be used again. A single cup and a solitary plate is all that has been found of $100 worth of chinaware belonging to him. The only insurance heard of is on the house of Professor WILLIAMS, and this was by a worthless Company.

The total loss can never be estimated. It is enough to know that several hundred persons are homeless, without clothing or food, except such as they have received from kind-hearted citizens. Most of the destitute are poor, and unable to purchase clothing or furniture, or even food, even if they could find houses to live in. Eleven will be taken to their narrow homes to-day. It is indeed wonderful that this number is so small. How any creature could exist in that storm and survive, is a mystery beyond the comprehension of even those who were in the thickest of it. Many of the survivors were terribly lacerated and bruised by the flying splinters and timbers, and some of the dead were shockingly crushed and mangled.

The following are the names of the killed and wounded, as far as ascertained: George W. Poynter, wife and child; Mrs. Margaret Sterrett, wife of J. W. Sterrett; Andrew J. Davidson, John S. McCown and child, Mrs. Dr. Jeel Y. Wilson, a child of Mr. Fite at Frewel's Knob, and two persons named Vaughan. These are all of the dead. Mr. Fite, reported dead, was still living in a hopeless condition this morning. Another child of his will probably die.

Dangerously Wounded—J. W. Sterrett, son of Colonel Robert Sterrett, of Hart County; Joseph H. Brown, chest terribly crushed; Joseph H. Foster, injured on the head, insensible; Miss Mattie Drane, Miss P. Neville, D. McKinnie and wife, Dr. J. Y. Wilson, J. Edwards and W. Parrish.

Severely Wounded—Miss Susan Hana is wounded severely, but will likely recover. Mrs. G. W. Neville and daughter, badly injured. Mrs. Neville's injuries are internal, and of a serious character. The little girl's frontal bone is cleft, and the brain is exuding. She is rational, and may recover.

Several persons were slightly wounded, and the wounds of some, which now seem to be slight, may prove serious.

THE LOSS OF THE METEOR.

She is Cast Ashore—Banquet in a Tent by the Shipwrecked Party and Their Guests.

The Milwaukee (Wis.) Sentinel of Tuesday publishes the following extracts from a private letter from the United States Consul at Tunis, Africa, dated Dec. 17, 1869, and giving an account of the disaster to the yacht Meteor, although no mention is made of her being blown up:

I have written to you about the yacht Meteor, owned and commanded by Mr. GEO. T. LORILLARD, of New-York. She came here from Algiers the 26th of November, and sailed the 2d inst. for Malta, where she arrived in fourteen hours; the distance is 220 miles. She sailed from Malta on the 10th inst., and on the 12th was cast ashore on Cape Bon, about fifty miles from here by water, and eighty by land. LORILLARD sent me a messenger, overland, who was forty hours on the road, and I wonder that he got here at all, considering the country he had to cross. I got LORILLARD'S note announcing the wreck, that all hands were saved; but that there was chance of saving the Meteor, and asking assistance. I immediately telegraphed to the Galetta to charter a small English steamer, then in port, and at 8 A. M. I was under weigh in her for the scene of disaster. My wife and another lady accompanied me.

We had a pleasant sail down the bay and round Cape Bon. The sea was smooth, luckily—for at this season we have generally boisterous weather—and, as a bright moon was shining, we had a good view of the bold headland of Cape Bon, rising abruptly from the sea to a height of 1,070 feet. After rounding the Cape, passing almost within a stone's throw of it, we saw a wide reach of sandy beach, with low land in the background. After firing several guns, some rockets, and burning some blue lights, we were responded to from the shore by bonfires, and in a few minutes we were lying to near the wreck. It was just 2:30 P. M. I got into a barge with Captain RYNAS, of the Lancefield, the steamer I had chartered, to see if landing through the surf without the lifeboat was practicable. We got on shore without difficulty, and met Mr. LORILLARD, his friend PHILIP ROBINSON, of New-York, with all the officers and crew. They were, as you may imagine, delighted to see us. I sent RYNAS back for the ladies and some other persons I had brought with me.

The Meteor, I was surprised to find, was lying on the beach, apparently quite uninjured. Soon after she struck, the sea moderated, and instead of her going to pieces, as LORILLARD feared she would, she passed through the hammering of the waves unscathed. Her masts were standing, but all her sails, spars, and work about deck had been broucht on shore. They had rigged tents with the sails, and looked extremely comfortable in every respect, particularly about 10 o'clock, when we sat round a table as well served and as elegantly as in a gentleman's dining room.

They had got all their stores on shore, together with the galley stove, &c., and were about to land a piano to lend harmony to the scene. The tent was lit up with candelabra, and the table covered with snow-white damask, a service of solid silver and beautiful cut glass. We sat down to all the delicacies of the season, washed down with Moselle, Rhine wine, Burgundy, Bordeaux and champagne, after which the finest of cigars; all this on a wild sand beach on the coast of Africa, with savage-looking Bedouins peering around. I do not think that there ever was a wreck made under circumstances so singularly contrasting; certainly not in Africa.

LORILLARD maintained strict discipline, had sentinels posted and prevented straggling. The Arabs, he said, had behaved well and had offered no molestation. I spoke to their chief and enjoined him to behave himself and keep his men in order, under pain of retribution if I heard any complaint. He promised faithfully to do all in her power to maintain order. LORILLARD made arrangements with RYNAR to get the necessary materials, implements and men, to get the schooner off, and at 2:30 A. M. we were again on board and on our way back to the Galetta, where we landed at 7:30, and at 9:30 were home.

If the weather continues as it has been for the last six or seven days, they may succeed in getting the Meteor off. But it may at any moment change, and if the wind comes round to the east ward, I fear that it will be all up with her. The present weather is exceptionally fine, and I fear I see, even, now, as I write, signs of breaking up. The Meteor was lost, I think, through gross carelessness, for she went ashore in fine weather, though misty, with a light wind from the southeast, and consequently fair.

LORILLARD had changed his sailing master at Cerves, where he discharged the American and took an Englishman who was quite unacquainted with the navigation of the Mediterranean. Cape Bon is very dangerous, and is called by the Arabs, Cape Treacherous. Every Winter there are numerous wrecks on it.

The Meteor is certainly the finest and most splendid specimen of naval architecture that I have ever seen in a vessel of her class. I believe I have told you in a former letter of LORILLARD'S challenge to the yachts of England to race for any sum from £2,000 to a silver cup, and for any distance from 3,000 to twenty miles, and against any yacht they chose to bring against him. He hopes to get his vessel to Malta and repair her there, and still have his race next Spring. The modeller and builder of the Meteor, Mr. FISH, is on board of her, and will superintend the repairs.

Verdict Against the Erie Railroad Company.

In the Supreme Court, at Hudson City, yesterday, a verdict was entered by consent of counsel for $11,500 against the Erie Railway Company ads. WM. H. WOODS. The claim, originally for about $12,500 was for labor and material supplied by the plaintiff in the erection of the ferry slips at the foot of Twenty-third-street, in this City, and on the erection of car floats for the Company.

Exhibition of Water-Color Paintings.

The private view of the third annual exhibition of water-color paintings took place at the Academy of Design last evening. A large number of our leading artists and literary men were present. The exhibition comprises some 200 paintings, most of which are of more than average merit, and are a decided improvement on those of last year. As catalogues have not yet been prepared, a notice of the pictures in detail must be deferred for the present.

Brooklyn, E. D., Industrial School.

The Industrial School Association of Brooklyn, E. D., gave a reception in their new home, in South Third-street, near Fourth, last evening. There was a large and apparently fashionable attendance of ladies and gentlemen, who made themselves unusually industrious in showing that a better place for the poor to find something good to eat would be difficult to find. The parlors and upper chambers were brilliantly lighted and adorned with the national emblems. The schoolroom in which the children are taught during the day is in the basement, where the air is hardly so free or fresh as it would be in the parlor, but the children are poor and unused to even the luxury of a clean basement, so, for the present, it may be said that they have the best part of the house. There are sixty lady managers, all of whom appear to vie with each other for supremacy in working. The objects of the institution are to provide food for the children of the extreme poor, without taking them from their parents; to provide a place where poor workingwomen can leave their children while they are at work; to feed, clothe and instruct children; to give shelter to the poor women and children who have no homes but such as they find in Station Houses, and to take cognizance of other cases which the Police may call their attention to, and to prevent begging and crime among children. Each lady manages a room, and has charge of a number of children, for whom she is responsible. To carry out these objects the ladies having charge of the enterprise will at any time be thankful for such donations of money, food or clothing, as benevolent persons may think proper to send to the school. The very poor children of Williamsburgh can now have a better home, or semi-home than thousands deemed better off. The association's friends were gathered in great multitudes last evening, and enjoyed their visit to the mansion with evident delight.

LABOR MOVEMENTS.

Strike of Shoemakers in Williamsburg.

The employes of Mr. STRUMPFLER, who is engaged in the manufacture of boots and shoes at No. 118 Ewen-street, Williamsburg, determined on a strike yesterday morning, in compliance with an order of Lodge No. 130, of the Knights of St. Crispin, of which they were members, but, their demands being at once compiled with, resumed work before the day was over. Their grievance appears to have been that their employers took work from contractors for the public institutions for making shoes, and handed it over to them to do at a reduction of two cents a pair from the price which he was himself to receive. When the strike was announced Mr. STRUMPFLER sent the work back to the contractors and found other employment for his men.

Plasterers' Strike.

The strike ordered by the Operative Plasterers' Association of Brooklyn, to take place yesterday, went into effect at the time ordered, and resulted in the immediate "caving in" of the bosses. The coopers of Williamsburg, Hunter's Point and Greenpoint, who have been on the strike, still hold out against the reduction, fully determined not to recede from their previous demand of $3 per diem.

The Northwestern Dispensary—Election of Officers.

The managers of the Northwestern Dispensary met last evening at their new building, corner of West Thirty-sixth-street and Ninth-avenue, a description of which was published in yesterday morning's TIMES, to organize the Board and elect its officers. The following gentlemen were chosen officers of the Board: AMOS MAYNARD LYON, President; MARTIN E. GREENE, First Vice-President; AMBROSE C. KINGSLAND, Jr., Second Vice-President; SAMUEL NEWBY, Treasurer; ROBERT H. BROWN, Secretary. After the election, a paper was read by one of the Board welcoming the visitors and patrons of the institution, and showing that the new building and property cost $63,000, of which a $39,000 mortgage, and $900 due Mr. RENWICK, the architect, yet remained to be cleared off, and that the hall above had been rented at $2,500 a year, on a lease of three years, for the use of the Broadway Tabernacle, as a Mission Sunday School. When the formal opening was concluded, the visitors partook of an elegant collation provided by the Board.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

NEW-YORK.

At an early hour yesterday morning a fire broke out in the shoe shop of HENRY FENNER, No. 191½ Laurens-street. The building, a one-story frame, was almost totally destroyed, and the flames spread to similar structures adjoining—one occupied by the grocery of SENA ROTT, and the other by the policy shop of WILLIAM PARSON. The flames also reached the rear of the boarding house of Mrs. SEAMAN, No. 136 Bleecker-street, doing a damage there of $300, fully covered by insurance. The three Laurens-street buildings, owned by THOMAS GIBBONS, were damaged to the extent of $2,000, and are fully insured. The loss of FENNER is estimated at $700, insured for $600 in the Astor; Mrs. ROTT'S loss is put at $300, and she is insured for $600 in the Continental. PARSON'S loss was trivial, and he had no insurance.

A patent railway car has been making trips up and down Broadway during the past few days. The principle on which it acts is that of a reversed railway—the track being affixed to the body of the car instead of being permanently laid down in the street. Instead of wheels, it has feet, which move on an endless chain, as it were, over an ellipse, and on two of these which remain stationary when put down, the body of the car moves until they are in turn taken up, and drawn over the elliptical drum, and others are put down in their place. All the machinery of the car is beneath the seats on either side. The principle by which the car is moved, it is claimed, is equally applicable to steam cultivators and to dredges for rivers and harbors.

The memorial with regard to removing the rendezvous of the Sound steamers to some point on the East River above Corlear's Hook, has been signed by a thousand of citizens, and will be transmitted to the Legislature to-morrow. Hon. WM. M. TWEED will introduce it in the Senate.

Rev. NOAH HUNT SCHENCK, D. D., delivered his interesting lecture entitled "Names" before a good audience, at Steinway Hall, last evening. This was the sixth and last of an entertaining and instructive series, delivered under the auspices of the General Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen of the City of New-York. The whole series was creditable to the judgment of the Society—the last not least.

The Old Folks will give a concert in the Lexington-avenue M. E. Church, corner Fifty-second-street, this (Friday) evening. All who would spend a pleasant evening should attend.

The Bond-street Homeopathic Dispensary, which is under the charge of Dr. OTTO FULGRAFF, reports the treatment of 26,479 cases of sickness among the poor during the past year, involving 7,980 outdoor visits and the furnishing of 51,995 prescriptions. The expenses of the institution have been $5,175 45, while the receipts have amounted to $5,815.
